Malcontents Said Cause Of Threats to U. S. Business

American individualism and American institutions are being threatened by the attack which has been launched by a minority group of self-seeking politicians of this country, declared W. C. Mullendore, vice president of the Southern California Edison Company, Ltd., in an address yesterday before the National Electric Light Association convention at Atlantic City. This small group of malcontents, he said, is marshalling the spectres of fear, envy, hatred, suspicion and distrust in an attack upon our basic American principles to the sole end that a few men shall be enabled to hold the limelight by posing as the defenders of that which they are attacking.

"Within the past few years the people of the United States have been warned in stentorian tones and black headlines that a new national problem of gravest menace is darkening the political horizon," Mullendore said. "This is called the power issue, but it is a false issue.

Real Issue Defined

"The real issue which I find has been raised by the prevailing attack upon the electric utility industry is whether the power of public office shall be wrongfully employed to undermine confidence in and destroy the good-will of legitimate American business in order to prepare the way for a program in direct conflict with basic American principles; whether it is in the public interest that the destructive forces of fear, envy, hatred, suspicion and distrust shall be aroused through false accusations, unjustified abuse and vilification of American institutions,—to the end that Socialism shall replace American individualism.

"Public utilities, and more particularly electric light and power utilities, are now feeling the weight of all the concentrated venom of these high priests of the cult of hatred and destruction. The business of the electric light and power industry, like that of all utilities, is clothed with a public interest. Our industry is a trustee of many interests, those of its more than a quarter million employes, its two million investors, its twenty-four million customers, and, most important of all, the basic interest of the public in the maintenance of those forces of individualism and private enterprise without which neither this nor any other great industry or business of America could have reached the present levels of service to the public. These interests we must protect if we meet our full responsibility."

Claims Assaults Unfounded

Mullendore then pointed out what he declared to be conclusive evidence which discloses that the more vicious assaults upon these interests are not only unfounded, but so dishonest and lacking in substance as to clearly show that the motive for such attack is something other than is pretended. Senator Norris of Nebraska has been quoted, he said, as saying that the power industry which Senator Norris calls the "power trust", is "the most disgraceful and far-reaching and shameful combination that has ever been organized by man", and also that "they have never done anything except to feather their own nests and deceive the very people who by their pennies contribute to their wealth." The contrasting facts disclose, Mullendore said, that the electric power industry in 50 years has built the most widespread, the most generally used and the cheapest electric service found in any country.

Findings of the Federal Trade Commission, Mullendore said, have established the non-existence of a "power trust" and the falsity of emphasis upon water-power and use of natural resources is shown in the fact that only one-third of the supply of electricity comes from water-power, and that the proportion of steam power is constantly growing. Likewise, the speaker said, the constant misrepresentation that electric service is non-competitive has been answered with proof that every kilowatt-hour sold for power is sold under either actual or potential competition.
