Association Unveils Insect Bite Dangers

More Americans will die this year from insect stings than from snake bites, an article in a recent issue of Today's Health magazine stated.

"Each year, more Americans die from the stings of the little insects buzzing in our gardens and parks than from bites of all venomous reptiles combined," according to the magazine published by the American Medical Association.

"Most medical authorities are convinced that severe reactions to insect stings are the result of an allergy," the article said.

No one knows exactly how many persons are allergic to the stings of insects, but in the opinion of one allergist "severe reactions to insect stings occur more commonly than is generally supposed."

"In fact, it is possible that unrecognized cases account for some of the sudden deaths attributed to heart failure and heat prostration in the insect season," Dr. Harry L. Mueller of Boston said.
