LEGION WILL 'SELL' BUDDIES ON DUTIES AS U. S. CITIZENS

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 14.—Organization of a great corps of 1200 speakers who will "sell" to American Legion members the idea of the individual responsibility of citizenship resting upon the ex-service men has been announced by James Collins, state commander of the American Legion.

"Individual responsibility to community, state and nation" on the part of the legionnaires. This is to be the principal plank in the platform of endeavors of Commander Collins during the next year.

For many weeks since his elevation to the commandership of the legion in California Commander Collins has been working on his plan.

Morgan Keaton, state adjutant of the legion, yesterday received from Collins an outline of the work which he hopes to accomplish during his term of office.

Back of Commander Collins' idea is a novel human-interest story.

Collins was a mess sergeant in the famous 91st or "Wild West" division during the World war. He came out of the service with $1000 in debts hanging over his head.

Since his discharge from Uncle Sam's payroll Commander Collins, who in private life is a construction engineer, has amassed a fortune of many thousand dollars. His payroll averages better than $5000 per week.

Upon the completion of the team as state commander Collins, who resides in Long Beach, plans to build a model community near Barstow, San Bernardino county, for ex-service men. He has already secured the land for this colony and will be ready with his plans before the end of the year.
