Traveling Lab to Disclose Quality of Standard's Oil

A modern traveling laboratory in a truck and 40-foot trailer will spend the next several days in this area.

The trailer is Standard Oil Company of California's "LABORAMA," with equipment designed to demonstrate the quality of "RPM Supreme," Standard's premium motor oil, to hundreds of fleet owners, new-car dealers, distributors, Standard stations, and Chevron personnel.

Traveling throughout the West since mid-October, the LABORAMA contains a portable indoor superhighway that will compare how many miles a Jeep can travel on a cupful of gasoline using different motor oils.

The mobil unit also includes:

1. Refrigeration and friction machinery for testing oils under varying degrees of stress,

2. Hot and cold tubes for testing the thickness of different oils,

3. Geiger counters for demonstrating wear characteristics of special radioactive pistons inserted in the trailer cab's engine.

The public may attend any demonstration wherever they see a huge red, white, and blue truck on display.
