Computers to Check All Federal Tax Forms

By REYNOLDS KNIGHT

Greetings! It's probable that more people than ever before will be getting an "unhappy return" from the Internal Revenue Service this year. For the first time, every one of the nearly 80 million income tax returns filed in the U. S. will be checked by central data processing machines.

The computers—bless their electronic brains — are programmed to catch "errors." Cheating and playing the averages will be a lot more hazardous.

If you want to avoid inspection-and-audit sessions with a revenue agent, be more complete and accurate with the information you file. Any change from the norm should be fully explained. Incomes over $30,000, big deductions, anything unusual will run up a red flag.

If you're a doctor, lawyer, waiter or for some other reason receive a high percentage of your income in cash, your return may trigger the machine; likewise if you have a variety of income sources.

Be extra careful to record any unusual personal or financial transactions. For example, if you suddenly stop declaring a dividend income from a stock holding, your tax return had better state that the stock had been sold or show how it was disposed of.

MOST BUSINESSMEN will enjoy the anecdotes that will fill the pages of a newly published edition of the book, "The Great Merchants."

It tells the story behind 22 of the nation's foremost retail operations and the people who made them great The merchants are introduced, along with some of their famous customers.

The book goes into every area of retailing, from variety and department stores to supermarkets and a unique sporting goods store. A new chapter in this edition covers the F. W. Woolworth Co. from the beginning, 88 years ago, when Frank W. Woolworth started the first five-cent store.

• • •

THE IDEA grew into a chain of 3,693 stores in 10 countries, including 1,126 stores operated by a British subsidiary, and the book tells the story of its current expansion and diversification programs and the dramatic upgrading of entire lines of merchandise.

The writers—Tom Mahoney and Leonard Sloane—did a lot of digging into the past, examining the present, and anticipating trends of the future.

Switzerland is the only country in the world today enjoying full employment. Out of a total labor force of 2.7 million only 216 are unemployed, the lowest record in the world . . . SOME HOSPITAL patients are literally getting "all wrapped up" in their treatment prior to surgery. It's part of a new medical method called hyprothermia, the lowering of body temperatures.

Cold therapy, reports the National Cylinder Gas division of Chemetron Corp., reduces metabolic rate, slows the heart and lowers the blood pressure. It has a wide range of uses in modern hospital care, including the relief of pain.

Although primarily intended for use in lowering temperatures, the NCG Hypothermia Unit can also raise or maintain body temperature. In addition, it provides exact temperature control to the whole body or any part of it.

• • •

THE HEATED or cooled fluid used to bring about the temperature changes is transported to patients through special blankets, a helmet and spot applicators.

The new Autoload 340 camera is equipped with a fast f-3.5 lens that reportedly enables the user to get perfectly exposed pictures even on a dull day . . . It adds numbers up to 12 digits and totals to 13 digits . . . A liquid saddle soap is being packaged in a 15-ounce plastic spray container. County to Use Nuclear Equipment for Testing

County Supervisors have authorized the Flood Control District to proceed with a program using low-yield nuclear equipment for soil testing, Supervisor Burton W. Chace said today.

"The program is expected to result in manpower reduction, more efficient contract administration and better construction," Chace said.

The low-yield nuclear equipment will be used to determine soil densities on District projects to assure they meet requirements. Present methods require considerable time and manpower.

• • •

A DISTRICT report noted that about 15 state highway departments, several state agencies, and federal and local government jurisdictions are using nuclear equipment for earthwork quality control, Chace said.

During the past 12 years, the State Division of Highways has conducted extensive studies of both theoretical and practical application of the new method.

For the past six years, the agency has used the equipment on various highway projects with so much success that present plans are to increase its units to about thirty.

• • •

OTHER USERS include the State Department of Water Resources, the U. S. Navy's Civil Engineering Laboratory, the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, and Ventura and Santa Barbara counties, Chace said.

Nuclear methods for earthwork quality control involve use of equipment which has been commercially available for about 12 years and which requires licensing only by the State Department of Public Health.

District personnel will undergo radiological health and safety training as part of the new program, Chace said.

Assignment TV

By TERRENCE O'FLAHERTY

At some far distant date when history of the human animal life currently crawling the globe is written, one of the items which will probably strike the reader as particularly absurd is our 1967 attitude toward homosexuality. With the possible exception of water fluoridation and anti-vivisection, no subject gets the pulses pumping like this particular deviation from the majority.

As long ago as 1961, San Francisco's educational TV station produced a thoughtful documentary on the subject entitled, "The Rejected." In 1965, San Francisco's KRON-TV produced a special film report on the problem. A similar report was televised by England's BBC and reshown in this country on 8 NET channels.

Just recently "CBS Reports" finally got around to the subject after several false starts. In view of the excellence of the programs on the subject which preceded this one by as many as six years, the CBS effort was decidedly second rate and as old-fashioned as the hula-hoop, which also came out in 1961.

• • •

ALTHOUGH I am certain that neither CBS producer Harry Morgan nor host Mike Wallace intended it, a few scenes were hilarious. There were the usual interviews with psychiatrists, those self-appointed house-mothers of the mind, and they were uniformly unconvincing in their theories about causes and effects. One interview was with a homosexual who had sworn off the stuff but had occasional lapses. He was filmed peeking through a potted plant which gave him the elfin look of a fairy at the bottom of te garden. I am highly suspicious of anyone who offers himself for sacrifice wearing a mask.

Only two sequences in the show were meaningful — and one of these didn't belong to CBS. The latter was the arrest of a 19-year-old soldier who was caught by the police engaging in a homosexual act. It was a pathetic document of frustration that was not without its grim humor (he had left his fiancee on the beach!). The sequence was bought from KRON-TV's two-year-old documentary — without credit. More important, CBS Reports failed to add the only fact that made the sequence significant: the young man asked the police to bring in his fiancee from the sand and tell her the whole story. They were married a month later.

• • •

THE ONLY salient material dredged up by CBS was the comment of playwright Gore Vidal, who said:

"We have a sexual ethic which is the joke of the world. We are laughed at in every country for our attitudes toward sex. The United States is living out some mad, Protestant, 19th Century dream of human behavior. Instead of saying, 'Aren't we wicked because we have a high divorce rate or because men like to go to bed with women,' why not begin by saying our basic values are all wrong?

"The ideal of marriage is obsolete in our society. Everybody knows it. There are people who indeed enjoy one another's company, but can you imagine a woman and man being told today that they're going to have to live together for 60 years and never have sex with anyone else? This is nonsense.

"Why not begin by accepting the fact of what human beings really are — both men and women: We have something that Andre Gide referred to as 'floating sensuality.' We can be aroused by this, by that; not necessarily by men or women. So let us begin with the reality of human relations and not start talking about weakening moral fiber because we're not living out this 19th Century dream where we all enter a kind of Noah's ark in twos, one male and one female, to spend 60 years in each other's company . . ."

• • •

THE FOOLISHNESS of the whole homosexual hubbub was brought into sharp focus when considered in relation to the newscast which followed the CBS program on the same channel. There was a report on a morally questionable war in Southeast Asia; a United States Congressman convicted of perjury; the head of the Nation's Teamsters Union going to prison for jury tampering; a topless waitress displaying herself nude from heel to headdress for the price of a drink, and a flock of parents behaving like savages at a PTA meeting.

Suddenly it seemed a little foolish to have our courts, law enforcement officers, and society in general wasting time and money prosecuting people whose only "crime" is the object of their affections.
