HULL CITES PROS, CONS OF 3 YEAR JUNIOR HIGH

The pros and cons of a three-year junior high school organization plan in Torrance about balance each other, according to J. Henrich Hull, Torrance city superintendent of schools.

"It is the quality of the staff and the way the program is administered that is most important," Hull said.

He cited an early analysis by L. V. Koos, which said that the original idea behind junior high school was to gain time for the maturation of the individual student.

For example, he said, the student is given a chance to branch out into high school subject fields if he is ready before time, to develop an interest in vocational guidance and education and to gradually bridge the gap between eight and nine, which is so often a difficult adjustment for a sensitive adolescent.

"Providing conditions for better teaching and scholarship, improving the disciplinary situation and providing socialization opportunities were other arguments in favor of the junior high school," Hull reported.

Emphasis later shifted to the opportunity to give students more guidance based on individual differences, he said, but these can be attended to in any kind of an organization.

"According to a study by Beatty, neither type has demonstrated its superiority over the others in furthering gains in fundamentals, even though junior high school organization seems to keep up in fundamentals, with more time devoted to other fields of study," the superintendent told the meeting.

However, a junior high school too often apes high school and is not satisfied to be what it should be, surveys show. Seventh and eighth graders learn too much from the upper four grades too quickly, and younger girls are given social ideas from high school boys in advance of their time.

Parents, too, want their children near home and in neighborhood schools up through the eighth grad , Hull said.

Another claim against the junior high school is that the vocational exploration offered is not practical as an instructional process for 15-year-old minds.

Final Fight Card At Wilmington To Feature 2 Bouts

A double main event, featuring four of the most colorful and promising fighters for the coming 1948 Olympic Games year, will headline the amateur boxing show at the Wilmington Bowl tomorrow night as promoter-matchmaker Joe Craig presents his final fight card of the highly successful '47 season at the Harbor arena.

Cliff Barnett, highly touted Long Beach welterweight, and Teto Garcia of Santa Ana, who has just about run out of available rivals in Orange County, will clash in the topline bout while the first half of the double feature brings out Don Turner, power-hitting San Pedro heavyweight, against a newcomer from the east, "Baltimore" Hernandez.

Both bouts have all the earmarks of developing into slam-bang feuds, and may provide a fitting climax to the Harbor A. C. season.

Georgie Jacquet, Southern California C.Y.O. flyweight champion from San Pedro, faces Willie Resenda in the semi-windup, while heading a strong preliminary card, the first bout of which will begin at 8:30 p.m., will be a lightweight go between Bobby Trujillo, Lee Prlia's boy from San Pedro, against A. J. Brightwell.

Following Friday night's bouts, the Bowl will remain dark for boxing until shortly after the New Year.
