CONSTABLE VORIS AND SCHOOL NIGHT WATCHMAN TAKE A SHOT AT EACH OTHER

The failure of the city school business manager to notify the principal of the schools and city constable of the fact that a night watchman was being placed at the school building almost resulted disastrously. About two o'clock in the morning Mr. Voris, the city constable, discovered a light in one of the rooms of the school building and immediately stationed himself at the corner of the building and waited. Soon Mr. Stiles, the night watch sent out by the business department, appeared around the building and came suddenly upon Mr. Voris. The city constable turned his flash light upon Mr. Stiles and covered him with a revolver, ordering him to throw up his hands. Mr. Stiles, an officer of several years' experience, thought it wise to obey, but not knowing that there was such a man as a city constable, thought it was a hold-up, and at the same time he threw up his hands he drew his revolver and shot. Mr. Voris also fired, both men shooting in the air. At this juncture Mr. Stiles jumped behind the cement forms that the contractor had in place for the rear fire escape. Mr. Voris followed his example on the other side of the stairway. Both men continued to fire each firing three shots. One bullet struck a two by four near Mr. Voris' face, and two of the constable's shots went through the forms alarmingly near Mr. Stiles' head. The constable backed off to the corner of the building and waited for his victim to appear. Shouts from the night watchman were answered by Mr. Voris and each discovered that the other was an officer performing his duty and not a hold-up thug.

A few months ago the Board of Education made a slight change in the name of the Torrance schools. The kindergarten and first six grades are now classified as Elementary; the seventh and eighth and high school are known as Intermediate and High. This leaves no break between eighth and ninth grades, which is a great improvement in every way. Many pupils drop out of school as soon as they get their eighth grade diploma. Under this new ruling no eighth grade diplomas are given in the city, but pupils are merely promoted.

When it was announced that $100,000,000 would be set aside by the U. S. government for school purposes there was joy in the hearts of the taxpayers. Up until the present most of the school taxes have come from common property taxes within the district. Amendment 16 placed the taxes upon the broad shoulders of the State, but the corporations fought this in the state legislature. Up to the present time they have been able to dodge their share of the taxes, but the King bill was passed, compelling the corporations to bear their share of the burden. This part of the program of taxation is now being carried out, but the opponents of the Smith-Towner bill are spending an unlimited amount of money flooding Congress with letters and telegrams and doing everything within their power to defeat the measure which will give us the $100,000,000, which is to be divided among the states. Another important feature of the Smith-Towner bill is placing of secretary of education in the President's cabinet and placing the public school education on a par with labor and the other occupations. If you favor the bill it would be wise to send a personal letter to our representatives and senators asking them to lend their effort in support of the most important educational measure that has ever been brought before the U. S. Congress. As the bill is now pending, immediate action is necessary.

The pupils now have the number of school days until the end of the year counted. School closing on June 17 and Monday, May 30, being a holiday, there are only sixteen more days of school. When school opens in September everyone is looking forward with pleasure knowing that the new building will be completed and the half day sessions stopped.

SEA SICK FISHERMEN

TELL OF BIG CATCH

terity the principles of justice, free-pacific ocean in about sixty or fifty mins. when the first fish was brought up on the ship the capt went wild, or it seemed as if he did, and yelled and sed all kind of nice things about the fellers that was slow about gettin there lines baited and overboard. we was pullin up great big fish, eighteen and twenty four inches long & two at once—you see ted, they had two hooks on the lines and we could hook two at once maybe if they had many in the way when you dropt your line and went to pull it up, for that was all that was necessary, they was more fish on the floor of the ship then could be ate in a year or two, we thot maybe the ship would roll over the way the fish was lumpin around the floor, but mose and claude and another boy was out in a little ship that was tied onto the rear end of our ship and mose was fishin with a rod and reel and couldnt pull them in moreen one at a time but mose was getting as many fish as we was and then some, he must have caught two or three doz. anyhow, in about sixty or fifty mins we had caught all the fish in the pacific ocean and they was alive and rocking the ship till nearly all the fellers got sick—they sed they was sick before they come, but that is what they all say when they first go to see and dont want to admit that they was not good sailors now claude toison was so sick that he turned white as a sheep. he looked bad for awhile, he began to feed the fish and they quit biting our hooks, they seemed to like his kind of bate better ourn. You no Ted, they say power of suggestion, or whatever it is called, always holds good. Claude's fysical condition suggested the same thing to most of the fellers and all them fish rocking the ship & capt Larsen laughin and sayin as how he new they was goin to be sick. Ray flood found so much pleasure in takin pictures of the other fellers feedin the fish that he didnt find time to be sick. They say they are going to have a pictur of the sea-sick fellers in the paper along with a pictur of all the fellers and part of the fish, so if you look at them faces long enough you will discern that woe-be-gone look as if they was glad they come but would be glader to get back home, you will see my pictur too. I don't look sick, but if you could see behind my ears and no the feeling in my middle body you would sympathiz with me. As I sed before, I was the last to get sick, a flood hadnt time to get his machine out before I had tried feeding the fish and was back looking for the scenery. Pecular scenery in the bottom of the pacific ocean, one person sees all sorts of funny things down there when they are looking for there shoes and other belongings they have lost. anyhow, the capt sed he thot as how a storm was coming up and suggested we head the ship for redondo, all hands went up in approval, those that had not been among those that fed the fish was fraid they would be soon and wanted to bring back all they took out. All hands and the captain was proud of the mornings catch. There was no dispute as to who caught the most fish; everyone felt they caught there portion of what mackeral was in the pacific ocean and was too sick to argue. when we got to shore and the fish was hauled onto the peer the question of how many pounds there was arose. Some sed there was five thousand pounds, others offered figures as low as five hundred pounds—which in my opinion was about right. I would say we had five hundred pounds of reel live mackeral.

when all the boxes and sacks of fish was loaded on the truck and we were on our way home, mose toison and ray flood admitted as how they felt better and was glad they would be able to visit TORRANCE once more. we began acting as fish-distributors on our arrival—giving fish to everyone we saw and would accept fish—taking all the fellers home and loading them with fish—after all had been well supplied with fish enough to last for two or three months we had a big box full left. mose sed we would take them to the McKinley Industrial Home for Boys and maybe as how they would accept them as a gift and we drove to Gardena with one hundred pounds of mackeral & give them to the superintendent or whatever he is, the boys were much pleased and exclaimed that they would have fresh mackeral for dinner. this was the greatest joy of all the days sport, those one hundred and thirty two boys were appreciative of our thoughtfulness.

there was one really pathetic sight that I must tell you about, when mose drove his lizzy up in front of Mr. Fess's home and called to his wife to come out and get her sick husband, she looked somewhat dismayed and sed "deer, did you get sick?" Mr. Fess picked up all the courage he could muster and replied "no deer." We all new how he felt. We felt the same way. It kinder reminded me of the days of John barleycorn and one come home after working late at the office, you no how one feels, but is ashamed to admit it.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE

Kenneth Paige at the home of his parents, 21031 North Arlington avenue, on Wednesday evening was decoyed away by chums to the home of Miss Mildred Adams, and later sent home to get his cornet. He finds the house dark and enters with his latchkey, and by the time he was well inside the door he was greeted with "Surprise" and lights on. He was in the midst of twenty-five of his most intimate chums and relatives.

Kenneth hardly knew what to say or do, but to say the least he was surprised.

The remainder of the evening up to an early hour was spent in games and music, in which all took part, the older as well as the young people.

Delicious refreshments were being served when a beautiful birthday cake decorated and studded with candles representing his age was brought in. The candles were lighted and Kenneth was invited to blow them out with one "blow," which he did, much to the amusement of all present.

Kenneth was the happy recipient of many valuable as well as useful presents, some of which he nearly earned, some being glued, nailed and wrapped, creating much amusement as he tugged and pulled in his haste to find what was hidden away among the packing in this box and that, and by his exclamations of surprise and joy expressed in French created much merriment for everyone present.

The party dispersed at an "early" hour, wishing Kenneth "many happy returns."
