Christmastide Cantata Here Great Success

In a duet with her sister, Mrs. Thompson, who has a soprano voice of equal beauty and training but somewhat higher range. One seldom finds two sisters with voices so well fitted to handle work together. Mrs. Thompson's rendition of her solo and the obligato carried throughout the last woman's chorus was nothing short of professional in standard.

No review of the program would be complete without a word of marked commendation on the accompaniments played by Mrs. Johnson. One of the most impossible things in the world is to work up music of this sort without a good accompanist, but Mrs. Johnson fulfilled the requirements from beginning to end. She is an excellent reader and has an assurance and a feeling for music which make her at all times a dependable support to the singer.

The quartets were well sung, the voices being very nicely blended, and the choruses were not only well sung, but also remarkably well interpreted. The choir showed the ability, so desirable and yet so rarely found, of watching and following the directions of their leader.

The choir's appreciation of Mr. Stewart's interest and efforts as their director was expressed through the presentation of a beautiful baton, tipped and trimmed with silver and mother-of-pearl.
