AFFAIRS of the HEART

By Mrs. Thompson

The author of this letter would have preferred for me to publish the answer only, but it tells such an inspiring story I must share it with you:

"Dear Mrs. Thompson: My problem is different from the average young wife's and yet like theirs because it concerns the welfare of my husband. It has caused me considerable worry. We were married when we were both eighteen. The first year of our married life we both worked and were very happy and successful. The second year I became ill at first, and all our savings were used up. At the end of our second year, we are on our feet again, with the exception of a debt of $250, which we expect to pay at least in a couple of months. However, we started without a cent and now at the age of 20, we have about four hundred dollars on a lot, and eight hundred dollars in furniture. In spite of the illness, I feel that we have done fairly well and should not be discouraged, for my husband has a splendid position. However, I have this to worry me: We are going to have my husband's father and sister for a couple of months during the summer, in November we are to have a baby, and next spring we have to move to ourselves. We have been living with my family, which has reduced our expenses considerable. So you see in order to meet our new expenses and clear our old debt, we shall have to be very saving.

My husband, realizing our need for money and desiring to make things as easy as possible for me, is working over 12 hours a day. And it hurts me so to see the weary lines on his face at night. He is always cheerful, but I can tell he is dead tired. I always have dinner ready at 8:30, when he is through work. Then he takes his bath and crawls into bed. We set the alarm for six and work in the yard and garden till a quarter of seven. Then he has breakfast and goes to work again. The same program every day. No rest even Sunday.

Can a boy of 20 stand such a strain? He looks well, has his sleep, eats well, and his work keeps him out of doors most of the time. All this is in his favor. But on the other hand, can a young man work day after day with no recreation in store for him at all? He seems happy and says that I am all he needs, that he is willing to work his hands to the bone for me and laughs at my fears. We can get along on less money. I have made a budget and we could meet all our expenses if he worked only 10 hours a day, but there would be absolutely no luxuries. I might add that he has no bad habits, neither smoking nor drinking, and that he has never been ill a day in his life. Please advise me in what I should do.

MRS. D.
Yours is a fine letter, Mrs. D. You should be proud of your husband, and he should be proud of you. An energetic youth has an enormous capacity for work, and it may be that your husband, with his fine physique, could stand the strain if it did not extend over too long a time. But there is a chance that he will break down under such a regime, or feel the ill effects later in life, as is so often the case. If he cannot arrange to have his Sundays absolutely free, so that the two of you can go out in the open, or just loaf that day, he should, I believe, limit his work to 10 hours a day. You can help by keeping all your little troubles from him, and making his worries as light as possible. It may be that the visit of his father and sister will afford him relaxation; on the other hand, unless he has more time to see them, they may make it harder for him to bear the burden. Your letter is so sensible, Mrs. D., that I feel sure that you can work out the problem in the wisest way.

HE FORGOT TWICE

Four-year-old Bobby and 8-year-old Janet were amusing themselves with a game of "travels" in the garden.

Suddenly Janet cried: "Oh, dear! I must go back. I've forgotten my face powder."

"I must go back!" Bobby immediately repeated. "I've forgotten my powder, too."

"Silly!" Janet told him proudly. "Boys don't use face powder."

"Well, then," replied Bobby, quite humbly, "what is it I've forgotten?"
