The Happiness of the Many Failures Are a Necessity

It has long been held that those constitutions are best which promote most effectually the greatest happiness of the greatest number.

Samuel Butler, for one, did not agree with this theory. He held that the greatest number are none too wise and none too honest, and to arrange our systems with a view to the greater happiness of sensible straight-forward people—indeed to give these people a chance at all if it can be avoided—is to interfere with the greatest happiness of the greatest number.

"Dull, slovenly and arrogant people do not like those who are quick, painstaking and unassuming; how can we then consistently with the first principles of either morality or political economy encourage such people when we can bring sincerity and modesty fairly home to them?"

"Much we have to tolerate, partly because we cannot always discover in time who are really insincere and who are only masking their sincerity under a garb of flippancy, and partly also because we wish to err on the side of letting the guilty escape rather than punishing the innocent.

"Thus, many people who are perfectly well known to belong to the straight-forward class are allowed to remain at large and may even be seen hobnobbing and on the best of possible terms with the guardians of public immorality."

"We all feel," he continues, "as indeed has been said in other nations, that the poor abuses of the time want countenance, and this moreover in the interests of the uses themselves, for the presence of a small modicum of sincerity acts as a wholesome stimulant and irritant to the prevailing spirit of academicism; moreover, we hold it useful to have a certain number of melancholy examples whose notorious failure shall serve as a warning to those who do not cultivate a power of immoral self-control which shall prevent them from saying, or indeed thinking, anything that shall not be to their immediate and palpable advantage with the greatest number."

Few indeed are the public men who dare say publicly what they really think. From the highest to the lowest they all say what they hope will please the greatest number.

Gooseberry Fool—Allow a quart of rather small green gooseberries for four persons. Cut off the stems with a pair of scissors. Put on to cook in a large shallow pan with barely enough water to cover and cook uncovered and slowly until the berries have changed color slightly and are tender without being broken. Slip them, when cooked, into a shallow glass dish and sift over them a cup of fine sugar. Let cool and blanket with thick yellow cream. Let stand for a few minutes until the cream shows an inclination to clabber, then serve. Or the berries may be placed on individual dishes and the cream poured over them and served. This is an English dish which is not very well known in America.

I says to Hudd

Did you ever think of the sentiment that is nearly always associated with furniture.

You know how when the kids are grown and far away how father rests in his easy chair that the family chipped in and bought him on his birthday.

And mother sews by the light of the lamp the children bought her.

And sister treasures the cedar chest that was given her years ago and keeps her baby's first shoes in it.

And big brother away off in the city making his fortune, won't give up the old desk he's had for years since he was in school.

And doesn't it look as if furniture is the ideal gift for all occasions.

Kitty

You all know who Hudd is, over at Huddleston's.

60 MILES TO THE GOOD. HOW'S THAT?

You can get from 15 to 30 miles more to the tankful of "Red Crown" if you follow the practical instructions in the Red Crown Mileage Card. Here's one motorist who got more:

"I've been following my mileage with a Red Crown Mileage Card, and I'll say the Standard Oil Company knows how to make real mileage gasoline. I'm getting 280 miles on a 20-gallon tank against 220 miles just a month ago, so I'm 60 miles to the good. How's that?"

You, too, can get extra mileage from "Red Crown"—start "saving miles" today. Buy from any Red Crown pump in town.
