

Real Economy in Transportation

for Economical Transportation

Quality is the biggest factor in economy; Quality determines the pride you take in your car;

Quality determines whether the price you pay is economical or uneconomical.

Quality, the finest you can buy in a low priced car, is provided by Chevrolet.

The quality built into a Chevrolet assures economy from the time of your purchase through the entire life of the car.

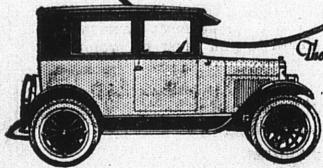

Come to the Special Exhibit this week! It shows how quality is built into Chevrolet. Come in—find out for yourself how remarkable a value you obtain in a Chevrolet because of its "Quality at Low Cost."

The SKELETON FINGER

by Headon Hall

© 1925 by NEA Service Inc

BEGIN HERE TODAY

SIR DUDLEY GLENISTER, suspected of the murder of a cousin to obtain his title and estate, when a crowd drops a SKELETON FINGER into a picnic crowd, consents to a search of the lands, but—

KATHLEEN GLENISTER, sister of the missing man, and Norman Slater, her lover, fear Sir Dudley will attempt to dispose of the hidden body to foil the searchers, so they shadow him, and in the woods they meet up with—

THE RIGHT HONORABLE STEPHEN COLNE, former British cabinet minister.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Thought I was a poacher?" he laughed mirthlessly. "Very natural. No, I am not setting snares for rabbits, Miss Glenister."

The emphasis on the harmless animal he named was as good as a plain hint that he was setting snares for something else, and Kathleen was tempted thereby to greater frankness.

"We are not exactly setting snares," she said. "Hunting would be a better word for it. Captain Slater and I agreed that an attempt might be made tonight to remove, or more effectually hide, my brother's body, and so forestall the official and unofficial search which will, I suppose, begin tomorrow."

"You are still convinced, Miss Glenister, that the finger was your brother's?"

"I am absolutely certain of it," Mr. Stephen Colne sighed.

"I, too, am of the same opinion," he admitted. "I will confess that my reason for this nocturnal prowling is on all fours with your own. You will forgive me for saying that I think that you have defeated our common objective."

"How?" cried Kathleen.

"Well," proceeded the cabinet minister, "while I was keeping my lonely vigil just now I heard someone advancing along the path from the Grange. The footsteps had nearly reached the glade when more distant sounds from the same direction assailed my ears, doubtless caused by yourselves. The first comer must have heard them, too, for the natural deduction being that he broke away from the path into the wood. He has probably abandoned his enterprise, whatever it was, and I at any rate shall abandon mine."

"We had better chuck it, too," said Norman quickly. "Sorry to have spoilt your sport, sir."

Mr. Colne's laugh was friendly and tolerant. "Don't blame yourselves," he replied. "Keen as you both were in a good cause, you had not so much at stake to inspire caution as the individual in front of you. If the police take the matter up we amateurs would be wiser to leave it to them."

"The police have taken it up," said Kathleen. "The sergeant called at the Grange this evening and took the finger and ring away."

"Really? That was smart for a provincial officer. He must have acted promptly on the rumour that are flying about. Well, good night, Miss Glenister. Good night, Captain Slater."

With which Mr. Stephen Colne moved off in the direction of Colbrook Towers. Norman and Kathleen started homeward, not wholly disappointed with the result of their excursion.

Their immediate concern was how to get back into the house and regain their bedrooms without their expedition becoming known to their host.

Emerging from the covert into the open park, they were partly reassured by seeing no human figure on the wide expanse ahead, though Norman's military anxiety for his rear administered a prompt corrective.

"Perhaps the blighter is behind us," he whispered.

"Don't!" was Kathleen's shuddering protest.

And when they had crossed the park and passed through the gardens to the terrace under the rows of darkened windows, the young soldier's theory was demolished by the materializing of the other, if less creepy, more decisive one. The gun-room door was locked. A Norman looked round for a loophole of escape. The word "compromise" reared its ugly head.

He was seized with an inspiration.

"Only thing to do is to go round to the front door and ring 'em up," he said. "We can pitch a yarn about being tempted to take a stroll by moonlight, but to put us on the level we shall have to announce that we are engaged."

"We are not engaged, and we are not going to be, while George's fate is in doubt," came the indignant rejoinder. "I call that mean of you."

Norman accepted defeat gracefully. "Sorry," he replied. "Carried away by my feelings, I suppose. Here's another plan. How about sticking it out in that summer-house over there? As soon as the house is opened up and the servants are about we can sneak in. With luck we might get to our rooms without being spotted, and if not we could square any domestic who saw us. A tender for one of the men, or a fiver if it's a maid, ought to do the trick."

Kathleen looked at the summer-house, a substantial structure across the lawn beyond the rose garden, its thatched roof bathed in moonlight. Well she knew the comfortable interior, with its pitch-

"Perhaps the blighter is behind us," he whispered.

Glenister," he said pleasantly. "It is not my fault that the object of your moonlit stroll has proved elusive. Don't let that worry you, my dear young lady, for, to use my coarse colloquialism, you have been backing up the wrong tree."

He struck across the lawn towards the mansion, but Kathleen, keeping pace with him, was determined that he should be more explicit.

"You seem to be pretty sure of the reason for our crimes, Doctor Melville," she said. "I wonder if you have hit on the right one."

"I seldom make mistakes in reading the human mind," was the reply.

Doctor Melville had shepherded them to one of the French windows of the dining-room, which proved to be unfastened.

"Pray take advantage of my provision for my own return," he said, standing aside for the wanderers to enter and following them in. "I must leave you to your own devices in gaining your own rooms, but I should advise caution."

CHAPTER V

In the Chalk Pit

AN iron-gray man of sixty, ruddy from the weather and mighty of limb, John Grimes, listened respectfully to his master's orders. The head gamekeeper had come up to the Grange after breakfast and was now being interviewed in the library.

"I quite understand, Sir Dudley," he said when his employer came to the full stop. "I am to collect the beaters and farm hands and go over every inch of ground on the estate. I will guarantee that if we don't find a body there won't be one there to find."

Heat the Whole House From the One Register

The "WARD" heats all the rooms in the house to a warm even temperature from the one register. It is installed below the floor and there is nothing to disturb the arrangement of your furniture or rugs. This makes the WARD particularly adapted to houses that are already built.

The "WARD" Sealed Gas Floor Furnace draws cold air from your floors, sterilizes and heats it, and then returns it to the rooms without the loss of oxygen. There can be no escape of raw gas into the rooms, because the burners are enclosed in a separate, asbestos-sealed, cast-iron box. All fumes from the burned gas pass into the atmosphere OUTSIDE THE HOUSE, through a vent.

Don't go through another winter with an antiquated, unhealthy heating system when you can have the modern furnace for so little cost. Come and let us show you how economical it is.
