OBSERVATIONS

(Continued from Page 1) individual man. As each new liberty has been gained, another has immediately arisen as a goal. The battle for improved rights has gone on through centuries. It is still going on.

As individual man increases his rights, it is natural that he demand still more—that he come to regard himself individually as that for which his government and society in general exists. This was the state of mind of Englishmen when the war started.

Faced with a common danger to country and home, Englishmen, like patriots of other lands, buried their age-old fight for exaltation of the individual and set forth upon a common battle against a common enemy. The rights of the individual were temporarily cast aside in order to turn a national enemy back.

THEN suddenly came peace. Demobilization threw hundreds of thousands back upon the necessity of making their livings. But opportunities to do this were rare. In a country almost bankrupt the chances for decent survival were slim. Yet with their return to civil life came back to men the age-old urge for individual liberty and equity. Once the common enemy was turned from the national door, men dug up their old fight as individuals and demanded as much or even more than they had before the war.

UNDER the stress of a great conflict the individual was welded into a mass. When that conflict ended, however, his ego once again was paramount, and the rub came when he was unable to satisfy his natural demands for fair comfort, peace of mind, and some semblance of economic security.

THE strike broke upon England because of miners' pay, but it is really the result of the age-old fight between the individual and the group. It is democracy against autocracy, taking form this time as between a mass of individuals and an economic autocracy represented by a parliamentary government, which perforce is demanding that the individual cancel his rights until the country regains its economic feet.

WITH the war and its economic aftermaths in England, the general strike was inevitable. That it may develop into a life or death struggle between parliamentary government and socialism is rightly predicted. That it heralds the long-awaited battle between class and mass in England must be obvious to everyone who knows anything at all about sociology and history.

THERE are those among us, whose wisdom is great, and who declare with conviction that democracy cannot be successful until the day when the individual is exalted in soul as well as in privilege. The battle may be drawn in England today.

OUR hearts go out in sympathy for all of our English cousins, who thus enter the first stages of what threatens to be a civil war. They deserve sympathy, for the conditions which brought about the crisis were beyond the control of the people. The issue lies between chaos and order; between parliamentary government and Marxism; between socialism and capitalism; between exaltation of the individual to the nth degree and the continued existence of a state in which all individuals must sacrifice much to the common weal in times of economic as well as national stress.

THE whole trouble in England is that individuals, by reason of economics, have necessarily been asked to sacrifice too much. What they were willing to sacrifice in war they refuse to sacrifice in peace. Yet the necessity for sacrifice is even greater now than it was when Mars strode with bloody teeth over the face of the world. A pitiful condition, but one in which men with blindness, swinishness and hatred have plunged themselves.

THE turmoil in England brings us back to the question of who won the war. And the answer, flashed over the far horizons of the world, says that there was victory to none.

Unless a new type of Lincoln rises tonight in England to lighten the pathways to us, it looks from this distance as though but two things can happen: Either a military dictator will win the day as a despot not unlike Mussolini, or England will follow in the footsteps of Russia.

Board Discusses Boulevard Lights

The Board of Trustees Wednesday night, acting at the behest of Mayor Dennis, considered the question of street lights on Redondo boulevard. The members of the board expressed the opinion that it is a waste of money to keep the lights all burning. Trustee Brooks said that owing to an error in the wiring system it is impossible to turn off part of the lights, and Trustee Wolfe said it would cost about $500 to rewire the lights.

Trustee Brooks said that half of Edison company would install a new transformer, but that the company desired the city to pay half the cost of such an installation. Mayor Dennis said he would favor shutting off the lights entirely before he would favor such an expenditure on the part of the city. Trustee Wolfe agreed with him. On motion of Tom Foley the matter was referred to the police, fire and lights committee, of which Trustee Inman is chairman.

Mrs. Creighton Dies Suddenly Monday Morning

Torrance Woman Expires at Her Home at Age of 39

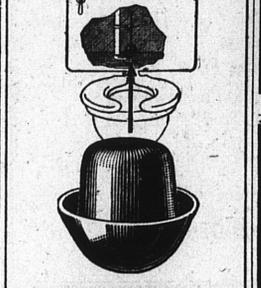

Mrs. Vietta Creighton, 39, passed away Monday morning at her home at 2256 Redondo boulevard. A blood clot in the heart brought death suddenly. Though Mrs. Creighton had been in poor health for some time, her condition was not thought to be serious.

Born in London, Ontario, and married to William Creighton in 1911, Mrs. Creighton had been a resident of Torrance since July, 1921.

Active in the work of the M. E. Church, and a member of the Torrance Women's Club, she is mourned by a large circle of friends.

Mrs. Creighton is survived by her husband, daughter Ethel, and son Stanley; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James D. Grant, 1311 Cota avenue; two sisters, Mrs. J. P. Penney and Ethel M. Douglas, of Los Angeles; and three brothers, O. B. Grant of Los Angeles, one who resides in Chicago, Ill., and another in British Columbia.
