LILTS O'LOVE AND LAUGHTER
 By Judd Mastimer Lewis

ONE OF A MILLION

Where shall we go this year, Seashore or mountain pass? Shall we struggle with silver kings, Or battle with big mouth bass? Shall we angle for mountain trout, Or try for a muskie strike? Where shall we go this year, For perch, or trout, or pike?

Where the barracuda strikes Is work for the rod and reel, And the tarpon's rush and leap Strains even a wrist of steel, And the leaping shark has cost Full many an angler dear. Seashore or inland lake, Say, where shall we go this year?

I've browsed through the catalog Of baits and of bamboo poles, And I have sat here and dreamed Of torrents and fishing holes, But they have been dreams, all dreams; But oh, but such dreams are dear To those who have naught but dreams— I know where I'll go this year!

Mr. and Mrs. Bert W. Flanders have moved to Santa Ana, where Mr. Flanders is associated with an auto sign company.

Long Beach now has 1,250,000 square yards of concrete streets

Long Beach Paves for Tomorrow's Traffic This Way

Six years ago local authorities of Long Beach realized that they must plan their paving programs to take care of the ever swelling flood of motor traffic.

To meet the situation they began building concrete streets definitely designed to take care of traffic developments in each section of the city.

Paving on the secondary through streets is heavier than in the residential sections. On the main boulevards it is super-heavy; heavy enough to withstand the peak traffic of today—and of tomorrow.

No wonder the cities of the Golden State are building more and more concrete streets every year; streets directly linked with California's thousands of miles of concrete roads.

And Long Beach, in company with these forward-looking communities, is setting a standard of paving service and economy which it will pay any town or city to investigate without delay.

Property owners, as well as local authorities, are invited to write this office for detailed facts about the experience of Long Beach with concrete street pavement. No obligation. Also ask for your copy of our free booklet on "Concrete Streets."
