ON INVEIGLING FRIENDS TO TAKE UP GOLF

"A feller ought t' go slow about invitin' his friends int' the notion of playin' golf," declared Tell Binkley day. "I hain't knockin' golf. It's a wonderful game if you're foot-lose an' have an income, or even you're livin' with your wife's folks. But I hain't goin' t' recruit 'er it. There's too blamed much 'tittin' somebody int' some-thing nowadays. I'd no more talk feller int' playin' golf than I'd all him some oil stock, but still feller kin own oil stock an' still be fit for other things. How do you know golf won't ruin some feller? What do we know about a situation in his home, or th' condition of his business affairs, when we say, 'Ole man, you're cer-tainly missin' a lot by not playin' golf,' or 'You ought t' git int' golf, you'll live ten years longer,' or 'You'll never give up golf once you git int' it,' or 'You've got an awfully greenish cast. Why don't you get out an' play golf an' git your- self loosened up?' Th' surest way the world t' lose a friend is t' talk him int' somethin'. I don't know whether it's golf, or a suit of clothes, or some business venture, or even t' see some show, if what- ever it is don't turn out five hun- dred times better'n we say it will, or a friend is off o' us fer life."

GITTIN' SCARED INT' GOLF

diversion. "You ought t' take up golf, Windsor. It won't only ease you down from your business wor-ries an' afford you a lot o' pleasure, but you'll meet a lot o' prominent business men, fellers you ought t' know. Ther' hain't nothin' finer than a round o' golf, an' then a fine cool shower. Oh, boy! Fi-nally Windsor Kale bought a lot o' clubs, an' a suit o' knickerbockers, an' some shares in a clubhouse, an' six or seven pairs o' golf shoes before he got a pair that didn't kill him, an' left his factory an' started fer th' greens without callin' up his wife. An' golf made a hit with him from the start. At the end o' th' first month his wife had left him, an' a few months later a receiver took over his factory. By this time both his thumbs was disjointed, an' he'd learned t' drink or leave it alone. An' besides he'd lost 178 one-dollar golf balls, an' had neu-ritis from takin' cold showers. Also he was posted on th' club black-board for $481.00, an' he'd learned t' swear in th' presence o' ladies. Th' last time I wuz talkin' t' him he wuz chewin' thirty-five cents' worth o' 'backer a day.' (Copyrighted.)

THE TEASERS

Teasers are the most awful pests, whether they are on the front porch teasing for a kiss or being teased for a kiss and teasing against giving it. You know what I mean, readers. So many girls are afraid that the teaser will put on his hat and run away, that they yield the kiss and then are amazed and disgusted to discover that the teaser stops teasing. And then he DOES put on his hat and go away from there. The teaser is a sure-enough pest. How often a fellow suitor and goes away into a corner and scowls because he can't have his own way. And how often a foolish girl, imagining that after all he is probably in the right, gives in to his extravagant whims. And, oh, how sorry she is after-wards. If I had a young man who persisted in teasing I am sure I would (to speak elegantly) give him the air. Because a man who starts in with that policy is pretty sure to keep it up. That is to say, the teasing young suitor becomes that most awful spectacle, the nag-ging husband. Goodness knows, nagging wives are quite horrible enough, but the nagging husband is a cross too great to bear. The best way I know of to cure a young man of teasing is to send him about his business, coldly and thoroughly. If he really wants you he'll come back. If he doesn't come back, count that your lucky day. (Copyrighted.)
