Dreaming of Her Indian Lover

Dorise Schukow, as Ramona, the feminine star of the Ramona Pageant, at Hemet, April 28 and 29 and May 5 and 6.

With a record breaking attendance this year indicated by the throngs at the first two performances, gala preparations are being made for the second two presentations of the Ramona Pageant on Saturday and Sunday, April 28 and 29, respectively.

Triumphs of past years were repeated by Dorise Schukow, in the title role of "Ramona," and Victor Jory, as her ill-fated Indian lover, "Alessandro," in the romantic roles of the spectacular drama at the opening performances, while others of the 24 principals and the supporting cast of 180 prominent citizens gave an admirable presentation.

Garnet Holme, the director, has announced that those who view the remaining performances will see a premiere presentation of the romantic drama, as intensive daily rehearsals are the order this week to insure as near perfection as possible after the confusion that always attends the opening of a play with such a large cast. Preliminary reservations for the succeeding performances have been the heaviest in the history of the production, and those who contemplate making the journey to Hemet for remaining performances are urged to make reservations early by Edward Poorman, president of the association producing the play.

Bus lines entering Hemet and connecting agencies are offering special rates including admission to the pageant and crowds are taking advantage of this means of visiting the valley to view the drama. Reservations also are being made at the principal hotels in Los Angeles.

That Home Vegetable Garden

By FRED McNABB

If the comic artists are to be believed, the man who has to reduce by exercising and dieting is much to be pitied. Exercising is not so bad, but dieting is a trial made worse by the appetite which exercising induces.

There may be a basis of truth in the view, if one's acquaintance with vegetables has been limited to the market products prepared overweight and who is suffering under the treatment of it, could be offered a plan whereby pleasant exercise would be provided, which would at the same time produce the vegetables which he must live upon, and make them seem to him the finest foods on earth, should he not jump at the offer? Well, here it is: Make a home garden and grow your own food.

The labor involved in a garden 25x50 feet, which will grow vegetables enough for an average family, is about equal to three eight-ten-hole rounds of golf per week. The only hard work is spading the ground, which can be done in easy installments or by a hired man. Sowing the seed and cultivating between the rows then becomes a pleasant exercise which, as the crops develop, is increasingly interesting. One constantly learns interesting lessons from the garden; and there is no lack of conflict—with insect pests—and triumph when the harvest is reaped.

All this interesting exercise can be obtained right in one's own back yard; and domestic relations are likely to be pleasanter than when golfing is the game. But the most valuable return to the person on a diet who does not like spinach and carrots is the changed view of these articles of food which growing them himself bestows.

The chief reason for this, no doubt, is that the vegetables from the home garden are quite different from those purchased in markets. Not only can varieties of better table quality be grown, more tender, of smaller size, and better flavor—but they can be served at their best without regard to the prejudices and bargaining instincts of market buyers. Moreover, they can be served quickly and escape the deterioration in flavor which sets in with almost every vegetable soon after it is picked.

Carrots, when half grown, make a dish so delicious that no one can resist it, however devoted he may be to a meat diet. The market grower cannot sell his carrots half grown, if he would. Spinach from the home garden is a different vegetable from that which has lain in the market or is taken from a can. Swiss Chard, New Zealand spinach, romaine lettuce, new peas, stringless beans, young beets—a long list might be made of table delicacies upon which a dieting gardener can feast without fear of violating the doctor's orders and without a thought for the forbidden delights of a meat diet.

Is THIS Battery Service?

Some car owners think that water is all that is needed to keep their batteries going strong. They are not even careful about the kind of water. WE ARE. Distilled water is the only kind we use.

But take our word for it, there is a lot more to battery service that saves the car owner money—than just testing and filling his battery.

VEGETABLE-PLATE DINNER

In the old days of hard work in hewing down trees and clearing forest plenty of meat was needed, but in the present day, too much meat lands one in the hospital or worse—the wheeled chair. More vegetables and fruits is the constant cry of dietitians. Three days of nothing but fruit juice, called the "elimination period," would be a good one for the most of healthy people to follow every few months. It is so hard to go without the regular meal, when often a few meals lost may mean much suffering saved. After the days using three or four oranges, three or four grapefruit, and the same of lemons, not mixed, but taken by themselves, a course of raw vegetables is good. Cabbage, lettuce, with a banana or two, simple oil dressing, using lemon juice or pineapple juice instead of vinegar, will start you a long way on the road to overcoming arthritis. A handful of nuts and raisins is a good meal, masticating the nuts. Now for the vegetable dinner:

Some buttered beets, finely chopped and well buttered, or use olive oil; a serving of fresh cooked and buttered lima beans, a spoonful or two of well-cooked spinach, a baked potato with plenty of butter, a lettuce salad with chopped fresh carrots and freshly grated coconut moistened with the coconut water—no dressing. This is a satisfying wholesome meal.

Green Pea Loaf—Take one cupful of fresh cooked green peas; puree; to this add one-half cupful of breadcrumbs cooked in one and one-half cupfuls of milk until a paste is formed, add two eggs lightly beaten, one teaspoonful of sugar, salt pepper, a grating of onion for flavor and two table-spoonfuls of melted butter. Mix well and turn into a well-buttered mold. Set in water and bake until the mixture is set like custard. Invert on a hot platter and serve with salmon. (Copyright, 1928, W. N. U.)
