RECEPTION ROOM REFLECTS REFINEMENT

The beautiful reception room at the Stone & Myers structure. Refinement, reverence, and efficiency are reflected in the lovely reception room at the new Stone & Myers Mortuary. From the massive wrought iron grilles at the entrance to the Spanish finish on the interior and the beautiful furnishings, the room co-ordinates with the Spanish architecture of the buildings.

Thickly carpeted, sound proof floors, and lovely hangings give the room an atmosphere of quiet elegance.

The room is large, with walls of a modified Spanish texture. It has an artificial beamed ceiling, imitating the old Spanish beamed ceilings where the beams are necessary to support the weight of the ceiling.

To the right of the entrance is a staircase, over which are three long, stained glass windows, forming graceful arches, attractive from both the interior and exterior.

Ingeniously placed about the room are doors leading to practically every part of the house. The stairway to the showroom, the runway to the work room and funeral car garage, a tiny hall to the three slumber rooms, the office, and the chapel are all reached from the reception room.

Thus it is convenient, yet a room of unusual charm.

Greetings
