

Delegates from 3000 Rotary Clubs in 48 Countries Close Convention in Dallas Today

DALLAS, Texas, May 31.—The annual international gathering of business and professional men representing the more than 3,000 Rotary clubs spread all over the world, drew to a close today, with an inspiring series of speeches and "what Rotary means to Rotarians and Rotary Clubs around the world." The aims and objects shared by the nearly 150,000 Rotarians in 49 countries, were given varied expression today by speakers from many countries.

This convention marked the climax of the Rotary leadership of I. B. "Tom" Sutton, an American-born business man of Tampico, Mexico, who has spent a large part of the past three years traveling about over the world visiting Rotary clubs and meetings. He has been in 26 different countries, from Manchuria to Middle Europe, and after making thousands of speeches he just recently delivered one by trans-Atlantic telephone.

The new international officers will meet this afternoon to complete the personnel of the board of twelve directors, by choosing three others from countries not already represented. Tomorrow the general officers and district governors, both old and new, will start a week of conferences on Rotary policies and methods, so that the incoming leaders may familiarize themselves with the duties and map out the coming year's work.

The first delegate to arrive at the convention, though from the United States, had just completed a journey longer than almost any other visitor. He was Arthur A. Peters of Paso Robles, California, who finished a 40,000-mile rail and auto trip around the United States when he registered for the convention ten days early.

The exhibition committee of the Garden club has accepted this invitation and is planning to enter a beautiful basket of gladiolus grown by members of the club. Of course, competition will be keen and to win an entry will have to possess special merit and beauty.

Plan now to attend the exhibit, and see the product of our own gardens in competition with the best that can be grown.

Columbia Crews in 50 Hour Drive

slowly. The shaft and flywheel No. 1 were turned over and the shaft inserted in flywheel No. 2 at 1 p. m. Saturday, less than 24 hours after the scream of the broken gear teeth.

MEANTIME Bert Lanz and Henry Lintott were seeing to it that bearings were re-habilitated in time to be re-assembled and in operation by midnight Sunday. They had planned to have this done in July but took advantage of the breakdown to renew the whole drive unit.

A Tolson truck went into action in the middle of the night Friday. The two bearings went to the Llewellyn Iron Works where they were re-habilitated and turned out. Two were re-habilitated by Columbia crews and turned out at the Pacific Electric shops. Bert Lanz says that crews at these plants worked steadily without sleep until the job was finished.

They had nothing on the Columbia men. Executives, Hatton's crew, Maskrey's men were on the job steadily without sleep from Friday morning until Sunday night.

AT 8:30 a. m. Sunday all bearings were back in the plant. At 4:45 p. m.—50 hours after the breakdown the big drive was all re-assembled and in place and the power turned on. It was running at 5 p. m. and the regular sheet mill crew went to work as usual at midnight.

Then Hatton and Maskrey crews went to bed—and Bert Lanz filed a few telegrams telling executives of the company that the mill was running again. A slip would have been just too bad. But Lanz had confidence in his crew and his crew came through like the real men they are.

And you can pardon them if their eyes light up with the joy of the fight when they tell you about the job. Chalk up that victory.

In making this announcement, W. P. Fuller, president of the company, and grandson of the founder, said: "This is inadequate recognition of the fine service which C. R. Root has rendered our company since 1879, in San Francisco, in Oakland, in Sacramento and in Los Angeles. Mr. Root and W. P. Fuller & Co. have come up together from the humble times to success and the company's present magnitude is due in no small measure to Charley Root, whom so many of us affectionately call the 'chief'."
