

EVENING HIGH SCHOOL

Tommy Wilkes is putting finishing touches on a coffin he made in night school wood shop because of any reason. This wooden kimona incense an electric clock and it is fashioned after a "G Father's Clock" with the pendulum compartment, mahogany, which finished beautifully, was used. Mr. Wilkes figured it took about eighty dollars to do the job. Lumber, chimes, and radio is costing twenty-five dollars. When finished it will be worth over a hundred dollars—a saving of one hundred seventy-five dollars. Why don't the other citizens Torrance save some money coming to night school?

Miss Chase, conducting the art appreciation, has a schedule for March 2 an illustration of "How beautiful were ancient Greeks?" It is expected that this will prove exceedingly interesting, especially since Olympic Games being held in Angeles this year is stimulating public interest in the life of Greeks of olden times.

In the class on typewriting Vauvel now has five students reside in Lomita. These are each working for credits woodworking class is, to men, the most interesting element on the evening school curriculum. A diversified variety of objects are manufactured by free and easy manner which enables a man to interrupt, or he has an expert advice should he need. Great credit is due many students for the array of beautiful and useful objects designed here from time to time. No new articles made there old furniture is repaired, with screens, doors, seats, etc. made, and lumber can be used up into fencing, spindles, and materials needed around a house. The writer of this article about three years at an evening class on cabinet-making, and a considerable array of articles produced in this class, including floor lamps, two desks, a library table, stools, two dressers, a bookcase, with doors, and nut bowls. These articles were produced tirelessly without cost except for her.

Mr. Wilson B. Woodburn, a member of the Division of Pests, State Department of Agriculture, with headquarters Wholesale Terminal Building Angeles, was a recent visitor to the Torrance Evening High School. Mr. Woodburn mentioned the course in bookkeeping and auditing taken in his high school in great stead now as one of his duties was the inspection and auditing of accounts kept by the various markets under his jurisdiction.
