Notes From Washington

By Charles J. Colden, Congressman, 17th District

The President's gold bill that loped through the House with a score of nine to one leaped the hurdles in the Senate with nearly three to one in spite of a heavy barricade put up by its opponents.

Many letters reach my desk concerning the seven billion dollar deficit of the present fiscal year. The question arises in the minds of many that if the Economy Act balanced the budget, how do we have a seven billion dollar deficit?

With twelve million citizens out of work and thirty-five or forty million suffering for the necessities of life, the administration was faced with the necessity of making provision for them or to stand aside and permit them to go hungry and supinely permit the country to drift into revolution.

But seven billions is a lot of money. A Wall Street mathematician informs me that there has been approximately one-billion minutes since Christ was born.
