Rolls-Royce Using Ford Chassis and Engine

One of the new Brewster "Cabriolet de ville" models, built on a Ford chassis, to sell for $3500. Brewster is an American subsidiary of Rolls-Royce, Inc.

Brewster & Company, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Rolls-Royce of America, Inc., has started production of a luxurious new line of cars having a Brewster body mounted on a converted Ford chassis with the Ford V-8 engine. It became known yesterday. Mr. Geo. Peckham of Schultz & Peckham, local Ford dealers, received word of the proposed new car from Detroit.

According to J. S. Inskip, president of Rolls-Royce, the car has been developed for a new market. Priced at about $3500, it is offered in "the fine car field at a price considerably lower than such cars have heretofore been available."

Most of the "luxury" automobiles are priced at $5500 and above, he pointed out.

While the new car will be shorter than conventional chauffeur-driven types, it provides room for as many passengers. The cars have a wheelbase of 127 inches, compared with 147, 152 and 157-inch wheelbases common on the usual limousines.

The body is striking in design, with out-flaring fenders, a sharply sloped radiator grille and bumpers that almost form a triangle in front.

Mr. Inskip said that the cabriolet model was now in production at the Springfield, Massachusetts, plant of the Rolls-Royce Company, and that it contemplated building other models, including some of the sports variety.

Rolls-Royce of America, Inc., manufactures at Springfield, Massachusetts, under a licensing agreement with the Rolls-Royce Company of England, a car virtually identical with the British Rolls-Royce, except that it has the steering wheel on the left side. The Rolls-Royce sells on the average for about $18,000.
