The Torrance Plant of The National Supply Company of California—one of the largest and most modern manufactories in the Western United States.

*We needed more room—
SO a new city was built*

TWENTY-FIVE years ago, when the facilities of the Los Angeles plant of the Union Tool Company could not be further expanded to sufficiently meet the rapidly increasing demand for its products, its executives decided to build a greatly enlarged modern plant. Co-operating with others of future vision, the Industrial City of Torrance with the Union Tool plant as its first industry, was planned and carried to completion.

During the past 25 years, this plant—now The National Supply Company of California—has continually expanded its facilities and increased the distribution of its products until IDEAL EQUIPMENT is favorably known and used wherever oil is produced throughout the world.
