Bees In Broadline

Many California beekeepers have resorted to feeding because continued cold weather has held back vegetation growth.

Cold Weather Depletes State Vegetable Crop

January, one of the coldest months in the history of California vegetable growers, seriously depleted the supply of these commodities. Figures compiled by the California Cooperative crop reporting service show the state is practically out of vegetables, other than a little celery, cauliflower, carrots and lettuce, and will be until the end of February.

In addition to severe injury suffered by most plantings, weather has held field operations to a standstill and growers have been unable to harvest or prepare for future plantings, the service reported. Quality of the surviving crops is not high and shows the effects of inclement weather.

Altho it is still too early to estimate the damage done by frost, the season is delayed generally in all directions, truck crop experts announced.

Provided favorable weather permits crop development during February, artichokes should be available late in the month. Cabbage now is available but quality has been reduced. Shipments of carrots and cauliflower will remain fairly steady but with impaired quality.

WHEN LOMITA BECAME EGYPT

Rain Similar to Great Deluge of '16-'17

Old-time Lomitans surveying the flooded areas of their community and vicinity during the past two weeks recalled the great rains of the winter of 1916-17 and the following summer months when the long-standing flood waters became the Egyptian Nile for a motion picture production starring the screen's first "vamp," Theda Bara in "Cleopatra."

The torrential rains of that winter left vast expanses of flooded land in the vicinity of the Foggi vineyard and the movie "Nile" flowed near the present intersection of Vermont avenue and Lomita boulevard. Great pyramid settings and Egyptian temples dotted the nearby hill tops and hundreds of "extras" and thousands of cattle and horses were imported to stock the settings for the spectacular production.

Veteran residents of the community remember how Miss Bara, now the wife of a social director and one of the famed leaders in Hollywood, used to ride a Ford bus from Hollywood to Lomita for her daily screen appearances. The inundated areas formed a picturesque background to the mammoth production and scores of Lomitans, earned some welcome extra cash by appearing as Egyptian natives.
