Nat'l. Supply Workers Endorse Own Union Over C. I. O. Group

Strange Case

working conditions, investigators them and, if they are found worthy, passes them on to the Executive committee, which is composed of Babcock, Hugh L. Henry and Hugh M. Davidson, representing the workers on hourly basis.

The Executives continue investigation of complaints or suggestions and conduct any further negotiations with officials of the National Supply.

Comments Are Blat Asked for a statement on the result, D. F. Faulkner, vice-president of the concern, largest manufacturer of oil well equipment in the west, said: "I have no comment to make. After all, I had nothing whatever to do with the election which was conducted by the National Labor Relations Board with the assistance of authorized representatives of both union groups. Any statement should come from them."

John F. Gamble, who with Lewis J. Blanchard, served on the election as C. I. O. observers, said: "Of course the result was not what we expected. Other than that, I have no comment to make."

Representing the Employees' Association, Hugh L. Henry and Gale Whitacre declared they were "satisfied" with the outcome of the vote but would not elaborate further on their victory.

Praise Cooperation Maurice Howard and P. E. Brown, field examiners for the N. L. R. B., were in charge of the election. They said that the decision was the closest of any election conducted by their office since starting operations and they praised the cooperation given the union-test by company officials.

Instead of jamming the electoral facilities by allowing workers to ballot all at once or at the beginning or end of their shifts, department heads excused workers under them to vote throughout the day. As soon as one department had completed balloting, another was permitted to register, to be checked for qualifications and then proceed to stamp ballots in the privacy of city-owned election booths.

According to Howard and Brown of the N. L. R. B., the test of union strength to determine which organization will be considered entitled to exclusive collective bargaining rights for National Supply workers, cannot be repeated until a full year has elapsed. Under the terms of the National Labor Relations Act sponsored by Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, the National Supply company, as employer, is not obligated at any time to enter into any contract with a union which has been proven to hold majority interest of the workers.

No Agreement Necessary

The law merely requires that an employer bargain collectively with his employees, which means, according to Senator Wagner, "that he shall receive their representatives and engage in a fair discussion, in the hopes that terms may be voluntarily agreed upon by both sides without recourse to strife."

"The law does not under any circumstances require that an employer bargain or any agreement forcing a worker to join any union, whether it be a union representing the majority of his employees or not," the author of the Act wrote recently. "On the contrary, it specifically makes it an unfair labor practice for an employer by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment, to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization."

"The law does not permit a closed shop agreement, but only where it is voluntary on the part of the employer and the majority of his employees. It does not more than protect a right recognized repeatedly by Congress, as well as common law courts, and not denied in principle by anyone—the simple rights of the working man to make a free choice of any union or of no union."

Filipino Gunman Gets Prison Term

Pleading guilty to the charge on the advice of the public defender, Frank Arthuro, 32-year-old Filipino, was sentenced to 1 to 14 years at San Quentin Monday morning in Superior court for assault with intent to commit murder.
