ELECTRICITY BRINGS PROGRESS

IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA the growth of electric railway transportation and the Edison Company has been closely parallel. The development of this great system of mass transportation has been matched step-by-step with Edison's continuing program of development of power resources and facilities for service. Southern California has the largest electric interurban railway system in the world. The Pacific Electric Railway Company operates approximately 6,000 train movements daily over 1,161 miles of track. One hundred million passengers are carried annually. It is the third largest freight carrier in the state. The Los Angeles Street Railway Company rolled up nearly thirty-one million car miles last year and carried over two hundred forty million passengers. The railway now has in service the first of 160 streamlined cars of the latest type, quiet and comfortable. These units are setting new standards in electric railway transportation in the West. Equally modern and efficient is the Edison generating and transmission and distribution equipment which supplies the electric energy for the operation of these transportation systems. Keeping pace with progress, Edison service helps build the communities of which it is a part.
