Wright Builds Anew, Skips Vertical Lines

PHOENIX, Ariz. (U.P.)—Masonry walls and canvas roofs, windows without glass and entry-ways without doors feature the great, rambling structure which Frank Lloyd Wright, internationally famous architect, is creating on the desert to house a school for his pupils.

The structure, still lacking a year of completion, is as unique and novel in the history of American architecture as the man and his students who are building it. When finished it will house the permanent winter quarters of the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation.

A year ago Wright and between 20 and 30 pupils came from Green Sulphur Spring, Wis., the summer headquarters; pitched their tents on the rocky slope of a mountain above the school site and started to create from the rocks about them something distinctly different and inspiring as the center of their architectural thought and activities.

Last year this group of "scholars"—among them three girl-moved great boulders in place for foundations and set them in cement, excavated for sunken gardens and a pool, built ramps for fills on the slope of the mountain and completed the stone walls of the main study hall.

Supplies were hauled over a road the students made themselves and which retains all the unexpected jogs and ruts of a pioneer trail.

The first completed dwelling was a cottage for Wright and his family. The students, however, will live in tents for another year because the dormitory wing of the construction will be the last part of the program.

Three sharply contrasting materials were used in building the one-story structure—stone, canvas and rough sawed pine. Rampart walls to carry the superstructure, and for the terrace and loggias, were built of native basalt blocks, found on the site, and thrown together, random joint, and with just enough cement to hold them. No wall is vertical. Angles and "V" indentations break the monotony. No wall runs for any great distance without a break or angle in its direction. But there are no curves anywhere.

From the walls, which run less than head-high in the main hall, great wood trusses go up on the north side of the room and then slope downward and across, dropping again on the south side to enclose the room. Between the trusses are laid a series of overlapping canvas-covered frames, much like a series of gigantic shingles. Some of them can be lifted for ventilation.

The masonry work blends into the desert landscape of the mountain side as thoroughly as might have an earlier Indian hut on the same site. Woodwork is entirely futuristic in design and treatment. The canvas is set off in spots with bright red hangings and stone stairways lead to sun-decks.

The terrace will have a pool and a bit of green lawn but the remainder of the surroundings have been left as desert.

Doors and windows are left open for easy circulation of air.

NO. 1 ACTOR . . . Paul Muni gives the screen another brilliant characterization in "Juarez," which opens tonight at the Lomita theatre. He plays the title role of the Mexican patriot. Muni's other historical recreations have been Louis Pasteur and Emile Zola.

Make Reservations Now for Holiday

Those planning a three-day outing over Labor Day weekend should make reservations well in advance. Every year numerous week-enders over Labor Day find themselves far from home with no over-night accommodations available. Planning the itinerary now will avoid such inconvenience and disappointment.

The provisions of a bill signed by Governor Olson effective Sept. 19, make this change mandatory. The new name, it was felt by the Commission members, will give the public a more comprehensive picture of the work the Commission was intended to accomplish.

Members of the Commission have revised their rule regarding payment of contributions to the unemployment fund. Hereafter, all contributions will be delinquent 20 days after the due date.

The rule will become effective in time to apply on contributions due and payable Oct. 1. These contributions will be delinquent after midnight Oct. 20 instead of Oct. 31 as would have been the case under the old rule.

The Commission also adopted a procedure which will permit it to extend the delinquent date in exceptional cases for not more than 20 days following the delinquent date.

County Compiling Data On Direct Lien Districts

The county's special assessment relief committee is compiling additional data as to the status of every direct lien district in the county, for the guidance of the board of supervisors in apportioning funds from the special assessment relief funds set up in this year's budget.

The report is to cover the amount of the present outstanding indebtedness, the rating of each district as to which is the greater moral obligation of the county to aid it, and wherever possible a list of persons in each district who mortgaged their homes and lost them as a result.

Legal justification for aiding districts is to protect the tax revenues of the county, as otherwise much more property would be allowed to go delinquent annually, and sold to the state.

Townsend Club Activities By BETH PAIGE

The blackface comedy recently sponsored by the local Townsend club, managed by Roy Palmer drew a chorus of praise from outside clubs who came here in good numbers to see what we could do.

We want our invalid member, Mrs. Rotha Moran, to know that good wishes of all members of our club follow her into the hospital where she goes today for medical attention.

Dedication of our new headquarters building on South Broadway last Saturday and Sunday was a big event. Vernon Glidden, local club president, was chairman Saturday. A rising salute of affection greeted Mrs. Townsend's appearance and many large baskets of flowers were presented to her, to Madames Stark and Burnham and Mr. and Mrs. Wagner.

Tomorrow evening will see another pot-luck dinner-picnic style, at our hall. Also a rehearsal of the club songs to be put on by our club at its initial program for headquarters next Sunday at 7919 South Broadway. Musical program committee, headed by M. C. Luster and Mrs. Paige, will feature some fine talent from Torrance. President Glidden will preside.

Cat Likes Mickey Mouse ST. STEPHEN, N. B. (U.P.)—Minnie, pet cat at the Queen's Hotel, not only goes to the movies but has her favorite stars too, local residents say. She purrs, they say, at the sight of Shirley Temple and Mickey Mouse.
