Beauty and You

by PATRICIA LINDSAY

Lifting and Strengthening Bust Line Through Specific Exercises

SAGGING breasts and low bosoms are the antithesis of everything couturiers and beauty specialists have been desiring for the woman of tomorrow. This unlovely line is the result of faulty posture and improper carriage.

If your breasts sag, and if you are under 40 years of age, there is hope that you may beautify your figure line through a program of reconditioning exercises. Exercises by which the shoulder girdle lifts the chest, pulling up and strengthening the pectoral muscles. Such exercises are necessarily less strenuous than other corrective exercises due to the delicacy of the pectoral muscles and tissues which hold the breasts in position.

Correct Posture First

My leaflet "How to Keep Young Looking" illustrates good posture, which is necessary to a pretty figure and good health. It also illustrates two very good exercises which help to strengthen the muscles of the midriff and the spine to enable you to stand gracefully erect. It is free upon request. Write for it care of this paper and enclose a self-addressed, stamped (3-cent) envelope to cover postage charge. You should practice good posture before you practice the following bust lifting exercises.

Do These Every Day

Again I present Neils Bukh's splendid exercises, the famous Denmark gymnast who has made good figures and good health a life long story.

Exercise 1—Stand with feet six inches apart and raise arms in horizontal plane, elbows completely flexed at shoulder height with wrists straight free of tension. Stretch arms downward and backward. Return to position.

Then raise arms overhead and reach as high as possible without raising your feet from the ground. Drop arms to sides and repeat entire routine twice.

Exercise 2—With arms at your sides, as starting position, fling them vigorously over your head, dropping the trunk slightly as the arms are lowered. Your head Exercise 3—Now curve the arms in a ring over your head, fingers extended and tips touching (as illustrated). From this position bend the trunk backward, pushing the arms as far back as possible. Drop arms to sides and repeat three times.

Exercise 4—Cross arms low in front and then fling them upward diagonally, then slowly bring them to a crossed position in back and fling them upward and forward. Continue this exercise for five minutes after you have gone through the routine given above.
