Job Office Active Here

Over 99,650 persons in California made new applications for work during January, 1942, through offices of the United States Employment Service. It was announced here today by E. J. Puhols, acting manager of the Torrance office of the Federal Employment Service.

In the Torrance office area, which includes Redondo Beach, Hermosa Beach and Gardena, Puhols said, "over 480 new applications were made representing an increase of new applications compared with 374 made in the same period last year and a decrease under December, 1941, totals of 548."

Jobs found for persons in the Torrance area totaled 315 as compared with 100 placements made in January, 1941, and 274 placements made in December, 1941.

"With an increasing tempo of war industrial demand for workers," Puhols declared, "it is important that all persons seeking jobs through the Torrance office should make every effort to keep the office advised of any changes in job status or home address. This vigilance on the part of job seekers will help them obtain work at the time their services may be needed by an employer."

What is believed to be a world record for speed in relining a blast furnace was announced today by Columbia Steel Company, subsidiary of United States Steel Corporation. The record, 31 days for the complete job, was established at the Ironton blast furnace operating near Provo, Utah, and knocks some 20 days off records previously established by eastern plants. E. M. Barber, former general superintendent of the Torrance Columbia Steel plant, is in charge of the $60,000,000 Provo project as a vice-president of U. S. Steel directing defense operations. According to Columbia officials, the record is even more unusual because the job was tackled from a standing start, in mid-winter, and in a locality remote from large steel operations. The Ironton furnace is the only blast furnace operating west of the Rocky Mountains. Where Speed Counts On Jan. 16, because of a "breakout" through the hearth jacket, it was necessary to blow out the furnace to reline. With the urgent need for all-out defense production, C. T. Keigley, general superintendent, realized that the furnace should be relined in minimum time due to the necessity of replacing part of the hearth jacket before bricklaying could be started. On Jan. 19 the furnace crew pitched in to remove the old brick lining. On Jan. 29 the new lining was started and on completion of brick work in the hearth, heat was immediately applied to dry out the bottom layers containing laying brick to the top. The relining was completed Feb. 11. Scaffolds were removed immediately and a drying fire started in the furnace. After five days of drying, the furnace was blown out in Feb. 17 with just 31 days elapsing between blowing out and blowing in.

In 1937 the Ironton furnace was last relined in an over-all time of 64 days. Inasmuch as the furnace has been operating during the past six months on an average production of 600 tons a day, the record relining job means that 33 days' output of pig iron amounting to some 21,780 tons will be made available to national defense. This saved production of pig iron together with its ordinary complement of scrap is enough to produce 44,100 tons of finished steel, the equivalent of the tonnage required to build approximately 40 destroyers.
