

House-Remodel Program Vital to War Effort

With shortages developing in a great many critical materials copper, steel and other metals, and in many instances even lumber, it is becoming increasingly necessary to utilize existing structures to provide living accommodations for war workers, according to Pat MacDonnell, district manager of War Housing Centers at Torrance, Inglewood and Santa Monica.

Utilization of existing urban structures, close to war industry plants, will go a long way toward solving the war housing problem, especially at a time when the scarcity of rubber and oil makes commuting long distances virtually impossible, he said. The conversion of these older homes into apartments and rooming residences will provide housing more quickly than any other way. And not to be overlooked is the advantage that such remodeling will use less materials vital for war purposes. "There are many large old homes in established residential sections that are being only partially utilized," MacDonnell points out. "Many of the families for which they were built have grown up and moved away, with the result that many of these structures have only half, or even less, of their usable space occupied. In addition to these older properties, there are many homes in newer sections which are also adaptable to remodeling to provide more living space."

The creation of additional housing through the medium of repairing and remodeling existing structures is greatly facilitated by the new amendments to the National Housing act. Under the new provisions, the time of repayment is extended from five to seven years; loans may be made in amounts up to $5,000. Loans to finance remodeling and repair work may be obtained from any F.H.A. approved lending institution. The loan is then repaid in regular monthly installments.

Most Popular Bills Disclosed By Mail Requests

The most popular bills passed by the state legislature this year were the $50 a month pension law and the repeal of the "spin marriage" law, the secretary of state's office concluded today from requests for copies of the measures.

Secretary of State Frank Jordan said requests from the public for the two bills far outnumbered those for any of the 1000 or so other measures passed by the legislature.

Magnetic 'Brain' Directs Traffic at Intersection

Motorists entering San Diego on U. S. 101 can get a preview on what traffic regulation may be like in the postwar world. In a string of seven intersections the divisions of highways has installed magnetic "brains" which automatically note any variations in traffic load and operate signals, giving a smooth, unobstructed flow of traffic.

Safety islands have been built for pedestrians, who use push button "wait-walk" signals when they want to cross the highway. The magnetic traffic detectors lie buried under the highway between 200 and 300 feet from the intersections. They "detect" the amount of traffic passing over them at any given time, and flash their findings to an electric brain, which in turn operates traffic lights.

Even turns are taken care of. A pressure sensitive vehicle detector goes in action when a car crosses it, holding the signal for several such turns.

NEW TYPE FREEWAY BRIDGES EASE TRAFFIC
The division of highways points to the Pomeroy and Soto streets traffic interchange structures now nearing completion in Los Angeles as examples of many interesting things to come in the shape and form of freeway bridges.

According to the magazine California Highways and Public Works, "these structures for the freeways of tomorrow will take on odd shape and new appearances as they twist and turn with the interchange lanes which must weave in and out, under and over, in order to provide for an endless flow of uninterrupted traffic."
