Warning Issued On Foot-Mouth Disease Danger

A warning to livestock owners to be on the alert against the possible appearance of foot-and-mouth disease in this country was issued this week by authorities of the American Veterinary Medical Association, according to E. L. R. Smith, D. V. M., of Torrance.

With hundreds of thousands of soldiers now returning from overseas areas where foot-and-mouth disease is widespread among livestock, there is a possibility that this disease may gain access to American shores as a "fellow traveler," it is reported.

"Foot-and-mouth disease virus is the most contagious of all known infective agents," the veterinary association's warning this week in ten million may transmit the disease. Veterinary inspectors are stationed at all points of entry for livestock and livestock products coming into this country, and maintain a rigid check against this and other foreign livestock plagues, but there is always the possibility of its slipping through with the heavy overseas traffic that now exists.

"Anyone noticing suspicious symptoms in cattle, swine, or other animals should report the case immediately to the nearest veterinarian or livestock health official, so that steps may be taken to protect all animals in the community. Foot-and-mouth disease has been completely eradicated from America today, and it means millions of dollars to our livestock producers to keep it from re-establishing itself here."
