

Community Held To Blame For Delinquency

While the subject of juvenile delinquency was a talking point in favor of the recent successful movement by which Torrance will assume control of its schools from Los Angeles, new inspiration for the planned Torrance cooperative school-community cultural and recreation program was received in the publication of a report in Washington, D.C. of the Home Responsibility Panel of the National Conference for the Prevention and Control of Juvenile Delinquency, now in session in Washington.

Asserting that "blaming parents and young people in trouble just doesn't make sense," the report urges communities to conduct parent education programs, provide home-making services for adults and planned recreation programs and nursery schools for children.

Such steps, the Home Responsibility Panel feels, will aid greatly in reducing the causes of juvenile delinquency. Inadequate housing is another cause of friction. Houses should have a sufficient number of rooms to allow privacy among family members. Homes should be located near schools and have yards that permit children healthy outdoor play.

"Juvenile delinquency is part of the heavy price we pay when communities and the nation neglect their family responsibilities," the report says. "It is cheaper to provide helpful living for children than to maintain them in correctional institutions."

Experience indicates that a good home life tends to keep children from the paths of crime. The Panel takes the position that the responsibility for providing adequate and well-situated homes, rests squarely on the community.

Greater cooperation between the schools and the community, community recreation, drama and musical programs in the schools, maintenance of school playground programs after classes close and on Saturdays not only will reduce juvenile delinquency to a minimum but will work for greater understanding between the people and the schools, local citizens point out.

THINK IT OVER

By Oden & Humphrey!
HONESTY OR HONOR?

Everyone has great respect for an honest man or woman. It is truly a trait that commands respect. We like to place our trust in a person we consider honest.

Honesty cannot be legislated! Although many persons are honest only because of fear of being exposed to society. Honor has a meaning much deeper and all-embracing. Honor springs from deep inside the human breast. An honorable person is not only honest but is inspired to use only the highest principles in his personal and business relations. It takes great moral courage to remain honorable at all times and under all circumstances.

In listing your property with us, you impose an obligation—one that we are proud to assume. We are under moral obligation to satisfy you and to find someone to whom the property will be satisfactory enough to purchase.
