BABY SHOWER COMPLIMENTS YOUNG MATRON

Mrs. Norma Cedarburg was honoree at a surprise baby shower given Friday at the home of Mrs. Jack Long, 1222 Date avenue. Co-hostesses for the evening was Mrs. Lloyd Davis.

Typical shower games were played by the group from blue crepe paper-covered booklets cut in the shape of a baby's bootie and tied with pink bows. Guests wore large pink and blue crepe paper hats.

The buffet table was beautifully arranged in pastel colors, featuring a huge white paper bootie tied with pink and blue streamers and filled with stock and sweet peas. Tiny pink and blue paper booties as candy cups circled the centerpiece. Crepe paper streamers lifted the eye to a silver crescent moon lined with pink ruffling, and a cradling a beribboned doll baby. Silver paper raindrops sparkled on streamers from this to the table centerpiece. Refreshments of whipped cream over strawberry shortcake with tiny silver umbrellas decorating each serving, carried out the color scheme.

Many lovely gifts were presented to Mrs. Cedarburg upon a large inverted plastic lace umbrella lavishly trimmed in pink and blue paper ruffles.

Guests present were the honoree and Mrs. Russell Martin, Robert Adams, Dud Hale, Gerald Grubby, John Cavanaugh, Tom Lewis, Leslie Larson, Harry Kyne, and George Vico.

BOOKS

"Naked and the Dead" by Norman Mailer. This is a leading best seller, an exciting and terrible story of how our GI's thought, talked, lived and died. It is generally acclaimed as the best novel yet to come out of the war. "To read it is really to know what the hell of combat meant by the boys who had to stand it."

"The Story of John Hope" by Ridgely Torrance. The poet, Ridgely Torrance, has given a wholly remarkable book and it is one of the most important books ever written on the American Negro. The book is no way fictionalized biography of one of the greatest Negro educators, has the qualities of a great novel. John Hope's story is for everyone interested in the Negro problem, in American education and American culture. It has been truly said of him "His stature so increased that neither the South, the nation, nor his race could lay full hold on his services. He moved in international circles."

"The Fire Balloon" by Ruth Moore. Easy going Sylvanus and smoldering Morgan were the two sons of caustic Gram Sewell. They all lived at Scratch Corners on the Maine coast, and fought the sea for their living. The descriptions of the wild storms that rise far out beyond the horizon and move inland, sweeping over the coast will open your eyes to the magnificence of wind and waves. The characters are well handled and the author shows the same kindly understanding of people that made her Spoon-handle one of the best loved books of 1946.

"The Scarlet Cockerel" by Gerald Lagard. The whole army of the Potomac hated and feared him, this Lane Byrn, recalled from his medical studies in London, to fight a war he doesn't want to fight. Lane is a man who would rather cure than kill but he reacts with courage and audacity that later make him notorious among Mosby Raiders. Dark and lovely Fae, daughter of a Northern army officer, is as high-spirited as the man she loves. This story of a nation fighting to remain indivisible is filled with well-drawn characters and pulses with color and emotion.

"White House Diary" by Henrietta Nesbit. All women who have run a hospitable home, people who like good food and all people who are interested in the White House will find anecdotes, details and descriptions to chuckle over in this tale. The great and the troublesome, the glamorous and the guests who never arrived and those who would not leave all pass by in review and make a most interesting picture of life in our times.

Diphtheria Danger Told

One of the most dangerous diseases to young children is diphtheria. Many times it is fatal. At birth 85 per cent of children have natural immunity to the disease which comes from their mothers. However, this immunity disappears in six to nine months. Therefore, children should have an injection of toxoid or toxinantitoxin soon after reaching three months of age because the disease is most apt to occur before the age of five.

Early symptoms of diphtheria are a very sore throat, a slight chilliness, fever and aching pains in the back and legs. The temperature varies. In some of the worst cases, the temperature may even be normal or sub-normal. In mild cases, the child may not feel ill enough to go to bed.

It is wise for parents not to disregard early danger signals. If a child shows any symptoms or complains that it is hard to swallow and the throat looks swollen, a doctor should be called immediately. It is a wise mother who suspects diphtheria whenever the child has a bad sore throat and who separates him from the rest of the family and calls the doctor. There is a much better chance the child will recover if diphtheria is detected early and antitoxin "shots" given by a doctor.

Better still, since diphtheria can be passed so easily from one person to another and is often fatal, parents should be sure to have their children protected against the disease early in life. This is usually done by simply giving "shots" of antitoxin to the child. Such shots help the child's body fight the diphtheria germs with which he comes in contact. A special test called the Schick test helps tell whether or not more "shots" are needed.

Wise parents do not run the risk of having their children get diphtheria. They avoid a great deal of worry by protecting their children against it by having diphtheria "shots."
