'Aerial Buzzing' To Stop Says Airport Boss

Positive action against low-flying planes that roar over Lomita rooftops causing "a definite hazard to life and property" was promised a group of irate Lomita citizens today by Edward Dietrich, manager of Torrance Municipal Airport.

About 20 homeowners met with Dietrich Tuesday night at the residence of Malcolm Cameron, 1936 W. Lomita boulevard, who with his neighbor, Joseph Manzetti, 1934 W. Lomita boulevard, are the leaders of the action against wayward pilots.

Blaming transient flyers from other airports for skimming the rooftops more than two miles away from the Torrance field, Dietrich said he is sending a photographic approach diagram to all users of the field and to neighboring airports.

The manager said that the flight strip has moved its rectangular traffic pattern in so that no plane needs to fly over any homes except those that closely border the airport.

Cameron charged that low flying planes, skimming "15 or 20 feet" above the rooftops in his neighborhood are causing a "definite hazard to life and property" and besides their "terrific roar" is a nuisance to the property owners.

Citing three accidents in the Lomita area in the past three and one-half years, the leader of the "anti-buzzing" movement said that, in case of a plane hitting a house, the homeowner has no assurance that the damage will be paid for by the pilot.

"We want to cooperate and be just as decent and just as fair in every respect with Mr. Dietrich fail to alleviate this hazardous condition, we intend as a body to take this matter up with the state legislature to have instituted laws that will require all pilots to carry property damage liability insurance."
