High Price of Meat Plays Right Into Hands of Rabbit Ranchers!

A cheer or two for Mr. and Mrs. Rabbit!

Noted for their multiplication, rabbits now are big business in Los Angeles county. It comes about this way . . .

The high price of beef, pork and mutton is playing right into the hands of the rabbit raisers, because rabbit has become a popular dish in the homes and restaurants here, it now develops.

Sales in Los Angeles county alone amount to 16,000,000 pounds a year, government experts reported this week. Southern California claims to have about three-quarters of the nation's bunny-raising business and packers claim sales gains vary from 20 to 100 per cent above a year ago.

Promotion of frozen rabbit meat either whole or cut, packaged and ready to fry in a number of market areas across the country, has lifted the sales, the packers report.

The rabbit business has also its by-products. Furriers use rabbit skins more extensively than any other kind—an average of 125 to 130 millions a year including heavy importations from Australia, New Zealand, France and Belgium.

Rabbit skins can be used to imitate almost any kind of expensive fur. Men's felt hats are made from rabbit hair and many citrus growers use fertilizer from the rabbit packing plants.

Even the feet make money. The American faith in a "rabbit foot" charm finds a ready market for the feet, which are dried, sold by the pound and shipped to firms which fix them up with rings for charms or for key rings, to be carried on the person or in the pocket.

One firm in New York reports having sold more than 10 million of these rabbit feet in the last ten years.

Rabbit packers and growers feel that their business is going to grow and keep on growing as population increases and the demand for meats continues.

And the rabbits probably will be equal to the occasion!
