HIGHWAY PATROLMEN AT WORK

A speeder came tearing down the Highway. A Highway Patrolman stopped him, smiled and said, "Speed's a killer; you don't want to die," opened his book and went on, "A car like yours, going too fast, had a tire blow out. The car rolled over and over. Driver and passenger were killed." The speeder promised to slow down.

"Calling car No. 10. Car 10," came over the radio. "Two men headed your way, fast. Armed. Suspected of murder. Be wary but bring them in." A truck was stopped in a cut. Car 10 was driven across the remaining traffic lane, making an effective road-block. A speck in the distance. A flash of reflected sun. A car was coming at terrific speed. Came into view of road-block. Swerved. Danced. Skidded to a stop. Turned. A shot. More shots. The battle was furious. The Highway Patrolman shot away two tires. Those two suspects were brought to justice, by one Highway Patrolman.

Highway Patrolmen have many jobs; some they dislike, a few they like. The one they like best is to greet motorists who drive sanely, carefully.
