

Lioness Club Heralds Holiday

MERRY CHRISTMAS . . . says Mrs. C. B. Walls, Lioness Club president, left, as she hands a Christmas stocking to Mrs. Frank Jakubowski, chairman of the Yule festivities held last Tuesday night at the Walls home, 2806 Pacific Coast Hwy. Assisting her were Mesdames Lowell Spring, Don Mosher, and A. F. R. Ewalt.

Lioness Club members got their Christmas stockings early this year. At last Tuesday night's turkey dinner held at the Pacific Coast Hwy. home of the president, Mrs. C. B. Walls, each member took a gay stocking filled with goodies from the fireplace, then filled her plate with Yule delicacies from a buffet table covered with an old-fashioned Battenberg.

Following the dinner, guests gathered around the illuminated Christmas tree to exchange gifts. Charades with a Christmas theme completed the evening fun.

Prior to the festivities at the Walls' residence, Miss Frances Dimitri opened her home at 1101 Cravens Ave. for a cocktail hour. Committee in charge of arrangements for the gathering included Mesdames A. F. R. Ewalt, Frank Jakubowski, Lowell Spring, and Don C. Mosher. Others attending were Mmes. Hugh Bowman, W. B. Hitekox, Fred Boren, George Powell, John Ritchie, Ike McTea, Al Ilsen, H. J. Osborne and Roy Patterson.

MODERN PLANNING

Annapolis was believed to be the first city to be laid out in accordance with modern ideas of planning and zoning by area.

'ROUND THE WORLD TRIP SHOWS MANY YULE TRADITIONS

For almost 2000 years Christmas has been the most celebrated holiday of every year. It's celebrated by all kinds of people in all parts of the world—people whose taste in living and eating differ, but whose feeling about Christmas is the same.

To everybody, Christmas means shining lights and shining eyes, gaiety, laughter, peace and joy, as well as prayerful thanksgiving. Christmas means good cheer—and good food. Christmas is stuffed goose, plum pudding, a wassail bowl, magi cakes of Lebkuchen, depending on where you come from and what your inherited traditions are.

SAXON FESTIVAL

In the time of the Saxons the festive Christmas board was spread with its "bord-cloth" and guests waited for a special treat that marked Christmas—the boar's head.

Legend has it that the boar's head was served to commemorate the brave English student who was attacked by a wild boar while he studied Aristotle in the woods. As the beast bore down upon him, the intrepid young man crammed the philosopher down the throat of the savage. Hence, the head of the boar was always served with a large apple stuffed in its mouth.

The English Christmas feast of that era always ended with a dish unknown to modern times.

It was called "frumenty" and consisted of wheat boiled till the grains burst. When the mixture was cool, it was strained and boiled again with broth or milk and yolks of eggs. As the years passed, more imaginative cooks added other things—raisins, prunes, mace.

PLUM PUDDING

By 1670 some enterprising culinary artist had revised the recipe further and chopped in some suet, to produce the first plum pudding. Today that dish is as traditional in American Christmas feasting as it is in English.

For centuries, English housewives have been reminded to start making their plum pudding by the Book of Common Prayer for the Church of England. The prayer for the last Sunday before Advent starts, "Stir up."

In Scandinavia, the festive "bord cloth" becomes "smorgasbord" which, literally translated, means sandwich table.

This, however, is a meager description of the untold varieties of delicacies which adorn the Christmas table of Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish people, and their descendants in this country.

Here are found cold roast pork with currant jelly, veal with mustard sauce, jellied calf tongue, smoked whitefish with caper, pickled herring in dill sauce, assorted fruit and vegetable molds to create color contrast, brown beans cooked in molasses, half a dozen kinds of spiced breads, cheeses, and endless varieties of many other foods.

TREE TRINKETS

Christmas in all countries has always called for special decorations. The use of trinkets on the tree dates from the early Roman days, when masks of Bacchus were hung on trees to impart fertility to those who gazed upon them.

To accept a bunch of edelweiss on Christmas in Switzerland is also to accept the man who proffered it. In Denmark, some of the bread baked at the Yule season is mixed with the seed at sowing time to insure an abundant harvest.

GERMAN COOKIES

Everybody who has German ancestry or German friends knows the typical Christmas cookies, Lebkuchen. It takes days to make this children's delight, but the general consensus of opinion among people who have sampled Lebkuchen is that they are worth the time and effort.

The melting pot that is America has borrowed its Christmas customs and cookery from countries in every part of the world. And has added some that are typically our own.

The eggnog is as American as Mickey Mouse, the apple pie that crowns the Christmas turkey meal is not traditionally served at holiday time in any other country; and the hot rum punch and old-fashioned are ours alone.

(Staff photo by Milt Svengik) Eight-year-old Jimmie Palumbo, 1752 Calamar St., takes advantage of the mistletoe to give four-year-old Christine Bigson, 2830 Onrado St., a little kiss. It is to the English that we owe the origin of the mistletoe kiss. The Druid priests of old England went out into the woods at Christmas time and cut mistletoe from the boughs. They blessed the branches and gave them to the young men to carry to the homes of the people. It was the duty of the populace to accept the mistletoe and to show their appreciation for the blessing by offering alms to the young men. The mistletoe was then hung over the doorposts of the homes, and it was thought that only happiness could pass under the branch. While it is not known when the rite was carried one step further to include a touch of romance, kissing under the mistletoe is now one of the happiest highlights of the American holiday.
