

Dusk is Tricky For Motorists, CHP Chief Warns

Dusk is the trickiest time of the day, and also the most dangerous, according to the California Highway Patrol.

One of every three pedestrians killed in traffic accidents during the winter months dies between 5 and 8 in the evening. One-fifth of all traffic fatalities occur during these same early evening hours.

"Dusk is the time of deception," Patrol Commissioner B. E. Caldwell pointed out in commenting on these fatality figures. "Other vehicles seem to disappear. Pedestrians are lost in half light and shadows. At about this time headlights seem to be almost useless and people fall victim of eerie distortions. Lights Useful

"You may feel that your headlights do not help you to see at dusk, and this may be partly true. It is also true, however, that the other driver will see your headlights much sooner than he can see your car without the lights," Caldwell reminded.

The commissioner offered two simple precautions that will help protect motorists and reduce the danger of these twilight tricks. They are:

1. Slow down and be prepared to make emergency stops.
2. Turn on your headlights early — don't use parking lights.

"Sundown is the most dangerous time of the driving day. Your visibility is limited. Remember that the same problem exists for all other drivers. It is most important that all drivers recognize the danger and drive accordingly," Caldwell said.

LOADED WITH ROADS
Mexico now has 15,000 miles of all-weather roads, Mexico City reports.

Did I hear somebody say cool? It's a hot cold is the word. What do you think of a boss that would make a guy swim under the ice all the way to the South Pole just to get a goofy picture? What I think can't be published so I'll swing into my commercial.
