BPW Club Gets Preview of $3,000,000 Marineland

Business and Professional Women of Torrance got a preview of the new Marineland of the Pacific when they gathered for dinner at hilltop La Venta Inn, overlooking the Pacific, Monday night.

Ken Norris, curator, told construction highlights of the proposed cultural, educational, and entertainment project as well as some of the problems entailed in capturing specimens for display.

VALUED AT $3,000,000
Located high atop a rocky 90-foot cliff at the southernmost tip of Palos Verdes Peninsula, Marineland is being built at a cost of $3,000,000 and will include the world's largest Oceanarium, an inn, restaurant and coffee shop, film, gift, and flower shops.

A 1800-car paved parking area, picnic area, and 250-foot pier, where new specimens will be landed constantly for the Oceanarium.

The Oceanarium, Norris said, will contain two of the largest salt water tanks in the world. These will house thousands of large and small sea specimens living in natural conditions which will be viewed, by the public through 358 large glass windows from three levels surrounding the tanks below the water surface level.

FOR NATIVE FISH
One of the tanks will be circular, 80 feet in diameter, 22 feet deep, and will contain 600,000 gallons of sea water, the temperature of which will fluctuate with the weather. Fish and marine life native to Southern California waters that do not migrate when water temperatures change will be kept in this tank.

Fresh sea water will be drawn from the ocean by powerful pumps through a specially filtered screen more than a half mile away at a rate of 2000 gallons per minute, and Norris has worked out a gadget which will cause actual waves within the tank.

WILL HEAT TANK
The second tank will be oval in shape, 100 feet long, 50 feet wide, and also 22 feet deep, holding a half-million gallons of sea water which will be maintained at constant temperatures so that fish and marine life of a migratory nature may be kept all year round. The tide will go in and out every hour through another device created by Norris.

Warmer waters will be provided by several smaller tanks where exotic specimens from tropical areas may be kept, and refrigerating equipment will cool waters constantly for other tanks where octopi and fish accustomed to lower temperatures will be displayed.

In all some 500 specimens of marine life will be on display, Norris said. Giant rays, sharks of many varieties, porpoise, sea bass, giant groupers, aged turtles, and scores of smaller fish will live together.

The larger specimens will be fed approximately six times a day to restrain their appetites and let the smaller fish live peacefully.

FLOWN FROM HAWAII
"Fish from Hawaii are being flown here in water-filled plastic bags," he said. "Small varieties from our waters present no problem in catching or handling, but the larger fish are giving us plenty of difficulty."

One way in which large sharks may be handled is to anesthetize them. "We use a drug which is a derivative of curare, the extremely potent poison South American natives tipped their darts with," Norris said, "punc-
