The SQUIRREL CAGE

By REID BUNDY

Wednesday is Davy Crockett's birthday. If the man who patched up the crack in the Liberty Bell had lived to celebrate it, he would be 169 years old, or just 166 years older than he was when he killed his first bear.

During the past 160 or so years one heckuva lot of baloney has been cooked up about Davy, a goodly portion of it in the past year. Take for instance: The ballad says he was born in a mountain top "Tennessee." Some North Carolina congressman claims Davy was born in that state. (Nobody, but nobody claims he was born in Texas or California.)

The state was broken up two years after Davy was born (one year before he shot his bear), and Tennessee was admitted to the union when he was 10.

According to Bob Tolson, editor of the Rotary Club's weekly bulletin, an expert is a man from some other town who knows some big words.

Reggie Lifland is ready to take on the United States Post Office Department.
