Traffic Control

Torrance motorists today can look forward to the passing of an era—in part, at least.

The City Council voted Tuesday night to replace the "Japanese Lantern" signals at Torrance Blvd. and Crenshaw and at 190th St. and Crenshaw with modern, accepted four-corner traffic control signals.

This decision, which has followed a virtual one-man crusade by Councilman Robert Jahn, is a long step in ridding some of the city's busy intersections of an inconvenience and a traffic hazard.

Installation of these signals, which will be done later this year with gas tax monies, will solve some of the major problems on the heavily traveled streets in Torrance.

Still remaining is the suicide lane for eastbound traffic on Torrance Blvd. Motorists approaching the downtown section of Torrance from Crenshaw can sail along peacefully in three moving lanes of traffic until they hit Cota St. There, without warning, marking, or signs of any kind, the moving lanes are reduced to two with angle parking along the street.

The HERALD has commented on this number of times, the city's traffic officials have recommended a change, the Council has agreed that a change should be made—but nothing is done.

The HERALD hopes it will be able to report a change in the street design there before it is obliged to report a serious or fatal traffic accident. It's only a matter of time.

Every year, about this time or a little earlier, I get a little nostalgic for the sight of some honest-to-goodness snow, not the kind you spray on your Christmas tree.

Since I became somewhat hardened during my tender years to the rigors of a cold northern winter, the thought of snow and icy, biting winds doesn't scare me as much as it does many Southern Californians, to whom life's greatest tragedy is a chilly swimming pool.

Headlines proclaiming that the mercury has dropped to 45 degrees below zero (86 degrees below freezing) in New York and to 13 degrees below (45 degrees below freezing) in my old home town, make my nostalgia cease abruptly.

I get to thinking about the snowballs, maybe with a nice rock inside, that I used to throw, or the snowmen that I used to make to look like my teacher, and I get nostalgic. I think what fun it used to be to plummet down the hill on my sled and I long for those days once again. I wish that, once in a while, Torrance had a little snow.

There are other considerations which help to decrease my desire for the pretty little snowflakes.

I remember how we used to hang the storm windows every year and tried to figure out which window went on which window. It never failed, but that we'd get all the windows hung but one, which wouldn't fit. Then, we'd take them all off again and try again until we found the right combination.

Then, there were many freezing hours that I used to spend out shoveling the walk and driveway. By the time I got done shoveling, it used to feel like it was lead and not snow on the sidewalks. Shoveling was especially nice if there was a coat of ice on the sidewalk to be chipped away, lest some sweet old lady fall, break her leg, and sue you.

Motoring was also a pleasure in snowy weather. If I could get the car out of the garage at all, chances were that the motor wouldn't start. The weather was no respecter of cars and even the fancy new models often refused to turn over.

I always carried a snow shovel in the car, because I could never be sure when the old jalopy might slip into a drift and sit there spinning its wheels. Some of the drifts looked innocent enough, but they could hold onto a car like iron.

Icy pavements also added to the winter season. Applying the brakes required special training. If I applied the brakes suddenly, I might find myself 50 yards away, headed the other direction, or on somebody's front porch. Sleds were great, but when I found myself at the wheel of a great big motor-driven sled, it wasn't as much fun.

Then, when I'd made it home, I'd find that the snow pile had been by, putting a three-foot pile of snow in front of the driveway again. That meant more work with the snow shovel.

When icy winds came, I remember all the paraphernalia we used to wear—galoshes, overcoats, earmuffs, stockings, scarves, gloves, and all the rest—until we looked twice as big as we really were. The girls didn't look half as attractive all bundled up with just their eyes showing.

These are some of the things that help to snap me out of my nostalgia and make the year-round sunshine and smog more palatable, and in fact, enjoyable.

Maybe there are some people who enjoy -50 degree weather. To me, that's colder than a certain well-known place and about as undesirable.

I'd just as soon choke to death on smog as freeze to death in snow. I'd just as soon not do either.

My personal gratitude to all readers: This column is untouched by human thought.

History reveals that while men get their faces on currency, the ladies, bless 'em, get their hands on it.

Walter: "Do you want onions in your hamburger?" Customer: "Might as well, I'm unpopular anyway."

Mr. Carter also relates about the man who told his wife he wanted something for his birthday that he didn't have. It so happened that she was a very frugal housewife and she particularly had her husband on a tight budget for spending money. So she gave him a $10 bill for his birthday. Figured he didn't have one of those.

Dear Ann: Our 18-year-old son was sent home from school this morning. This certain teacher has always picked on him. He tells me he did nothing wrong. My child is not perfect, Mrs. Landers, and perhaps he is a trifle high-spirited, but he's a normal boy and always tells the truth.

Why would a teacher be so mean to send a child home from school in the middle of the day for no reason? Please give me your opinion—It's beyond me—MOTHER X

When a child is sent home from school in the middle of the day "for no reason"—there's a reason. Go to school, talk to the teacher and find out what it is. You do your son no favor when you support his position and decide teacher is "mean" before you learn the facts. The quality you describe as "high spirited translated by the teacher could mean "a nuisance and a disturbance in the classroom." Junior probably exceeded her limit of tolerance so she sent him home to let you know SHE isn't able to cope with him—either.

Dear Ann: I'm a girl 13 and my 4-year-old brother is making a nervous wreck out of me. Whenever I want to see a TV program he kicks and screams and hollers until he gets my mother to turn

Dear Ann: I just read Brenda's letter and as an old Navy man of 17 years I'd like to clear the air for this unfortunate girl. Any married man who serves six years overseas without rotation back to the states requested it. There is no official obligation during peace-time to serve a "double-hitch." In fact, some men who request additional overseas duty are refused.

Her husband has probably found a Lotus Blossom in Japan or a Fraulein in Germany. One way to find out is to check his bank account when he comes home. If he's been on the up and up he ought to have a bundle of cash by this time.

A married man overseas is not supposed to do anything for entertainment except take pictures, fish, and swim. Please print this, Ann, it's the straight dope.
