

National Supply Doubles Size Of Exhibit Display

National Supply Company will have the largest exhibit of its history at the International Petroleum Exposition, to be held in Tulsa, Okla., May 14th through 23rd.

In addition to its customary 10,000-square-foot area, the company has contracted for adjoining space that will more than double the size of its exhibit.

Three drilling rigs, as well as 11 pumping units and a wide variety of other National Supply products, will be displayed in a setting designed both for the interest and the comfort of visitors.

NATIONAL SUPPLY'S famous "Rotorama," a circular, glass-enclosed observation deck, will be retained to provide an air-conditioned lounge, but all other features of the exhibit will be new.

Henry Dreyfuss, who designed National Supply's spectacular exhibit for the previous exposition, in 1955, has again worked out the over-all exhibit concept, with M. Murray McCune and Gordon A. McCune, Tulsa architects, again handling detailed architectural designs and specifications. Horster Construction Company, Tulsa, are the general contractors on the project.

H. E. Heywood Jr., is in charge of the exhibit for National Supply, assisted by William C. Marmack.
