Improvement of Law Enforcement At Local Level Sought by State

By VINCENT THOMAS
Assemblyman, 68th District

Continued improvement in the quality of our local law enforcement is the primary objective of another important new California law which went into effect Sept. 18th. It establishes a new state commission on peace officer standards and training in the department of justice, and provides for grants to cities and counties which meet the standards set by the commission for recruitment and training of peace officers.

The new act is the culmination of years of research and legislative effort on the part of interested organizations, city, county and state officials, as well as by us legislators. It is the first legislative recognition that vocational training in the proper enforcement of state laws is a matter of statewide interest and concern. Yet, oddly enough, some criticism was leveled at the bill during its legislative consideration based on the slightly illogical apprehension that its enactment might lead to a "police state."

THE COMMISSION which will operate the new program will have nine members, each appointed by the Governor for a three year term with the advice and consent of the Senate and the attorney-general. Under the law, five of the members must be sheriffs, chiefs of police, or peace officers named by them, two must be city officials, and two county officials.

In addition to the usual powers given a state agency so it can carry on its work, the new commission has been given the special task of adopting rules which establish minimum standards of mental, physical and moral fitness which will apply to recruitment of peace officers by any city or county which applies for grants under the law, and standards for their training. Such rules can be adopted only after public hearings as required by other provisions of state law.

IN ESTABLISHING its standards for training, the commission is specifically authorized to permit the training it requires to be taken at existing educational institutions which it approves. It is also authorized to make whatever investigations may be necessary to determine whether the cities and counties who sign up for state aid under the program actually live up to the standards which are set up.

To pay for this new program, the law sets up a special peace officers' training fund in the state treasury, which is reserved exclusively for costs of administering the law and for grants under it to cooperating cities and counties. Revenues for this fund will be derived entirely from a five per cent penalty assessment which will be added to all fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed by every California court for all criminal offenses, except violations of the vehicle and fish and game codes, or of local ordinances relating to operation of motor vehicles. Revenues are expected to total between $600,000 and $700,000 per year.

FROM THIS fund, the commission will allocate to each cooperating city or county an amount up to one-half the salary of each peace officer recruited and trained according to commission standards, plus one-half his necessary living expenses required because his training keeps him from home overnight.

This financing method has the unique virtue of putting a substantial portion of the cost of training peace officers directly on criminals, thus making crime less profitable, and freeing the taxpayers from the expense of footing the bill completely. Sounds like a good idea, doesn't it?

Lomita Civic Group to See Health Film

H. L. Messier, assistant director of the Sanitation Division of the County Health Department will present a film showing the activities of the department, and give a brief talk on local health problems at the regular quarterly meeting of the Lomita Civic Leaders in the auditorium of Lomita Elementary School, 247th and Narbonne, at 8 tonight.

At the league meeting following the talk, the annual nominating committee will be announced. Two proposed amendments to the constitution will be given second reading and submitted to a vote.

The resignations of the secretary, Mrs. M. S. Goodwin, and of the hospitality chairman, M. S. Goodwin, on account of leaving Lomita, will be submitted.

Newcomers to Lomita are urged to see the film and all interested persons will be welcome.

Garden Checklist

By California Association of Nurserymen

- (1) Lawns will benefit by feeding now to green them up for winter. You can set the cutting blades on your mower to cut closer as cool weather approaches.
- (2) Snails and slugs become more active as cool weather comes on. Bait to stop them before they get a foothold.
- (3) Use soil conditioners now to break up compacted areas. Work the soil to the condition you want it and mix the conditioner in to keep it that way.
- (4) Clean up spent annuals in your garden and burn them. Check with your nurserymen about winter annuals to take their place.
- (5) Plant perennials from nursery flats for bloom next spring. Work the ground well before you plant them. They do better when soil is dug to more than a foot than they do with only a nominal spading.
