

Marineland Preparing for Two Million Guests in '60

Marineland of the Pacific is busy this winter preparing for the biggest crowd in its history during 1960, when more than 2,000,000 guests are expected to come to applaud Bubbles the whale, and other underwater stars.

The oceanarium's "bring-'em-back-alive" fishermen are searching for killer sharks to add to the thousands of fish on display. Trainers are schooling whales and porpoises in fascinating new games. And workmen have been hammering and sawing since last fall to expand show facilities, exhibits and shops.

The world's largest oceanarium has had record crowds each year during the last three years and vice president-general manager, William F. Monahan, confidently expects the phenomenal growth to continue.

"MARINELAND has presented new attractions for its visitors every year," Monahan said, "but we are going further afield than ever before to collect exciting new specimens for exhibition in 1960."

Huge, man-eating white sharks — the killers which stalked Southern California beaches last summer — will be sought by Marineland collectors in the Gulf of Lower California, along with other rare and exciting specimens. They will be brought to Marineland over long distances by use of a new "super-aquarium," a 3000-gallon tank which can be hauled on a truck.

TRAINERS are grooming

Marineland's top stars, the whales, for even more sensational accomplishments. In one trick, 300-pound Bimbo, the biggest whale in captivity in the world, will hurl his 17-foot frame entirely out of the water in a high jump. His girl friends, Bubbles and Squirt, will add additional capers to their routines of singing, dancing, leaping, lifting weights, wearing hats, and shaking hands.

Additional holding tanks will be built at the oceanarium for dividual specimens never before seen in the United States.

Marineland's gift shops are being doubled in size with construction of a sparkling new building where flowers, basketware, greeting cards, and exotic shellware will be sold. Marineland motel also will be enlarged, with addition of two new luxury units, a conference room and a lounge overlooking Catalina Channel. Monahan said Marineland also plans to expand its sprawling acreage of free parking space so visitors can continue to reach the oceanarium in ease and comfort.
