Special 'Serve at Home' Army Enlistments Related

The United States Army this week announced a special enlistment opportunity offering young men assignment to a Southern California Nike site and technical training in missiles.

Lt. Colonel Robert O. Thomas, commander of the Los Angeles Recruiting Main Station has authorized local Army recruiters to enlist a select group of men for the special "home-town" recruiting project, designed to supply manpower for Nike-Hercules missile defenses located within the greater Los Angeles area.

Applications are being accepted now from qualified applicants, 17 to 34, for training as a group at the Fort Ord basic training center and subsequent assignment to one of the 16 Los Angeles area missile sites. Deadline for applicants has been set for Feb. 19.

The enlistment drive will be culminated in a colorful group swearing-in ceremony to be staged Feb. 25 at the Los Angeles civic center.

Additional information may be obtained at the Torrance Army recruiting station, 1319 1/2 Sartori Avenue or by calling Sgt. Elgin Elliott and Donald Fleming at FA 8-7069.
