YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Watch Signs Of Adolescence"

Dear Ann: I don't know how to word this but I'm constantly being mistaken for my husband's daughter instead of his wife.

Mike is 30 and I am 19. Unfortunately he's quite bald and it makes him look older. I've tried to add a few years to my looks by using sophisticated makeup. But all it does is make me look like a barfly.

At first we used to joke about it but now my heart just aches when someone refers to my "father" and he hears about it. What can I do? — YOUNG ONE

Dear Young: If you're wearing bobby sox, flats, sweaters and skirts, switch to more adult clothing. If you're wearing a pony tail try a more mature hair-do. If you giggle or speak in a high-pitched voice watch these give-away signs of adolescence.

As for Mike, he can keep his weight down, his spirits buoyant and his hat on — whenever possible.

Dear Ann: I am the maddest 16-year-old girl who ever wrote to you. I have a fat slob of a cousin who is my age. She lives in Tulsa and is coming to visit us during Easter vacation. My mother has given me orders to fix her up some dates or stay home, too. Her personality isn't bad but she's a real moose and very tall.

I've asked three of the best-looking guys I know to take her out and they want to see pictures. Well, if they see pictures THAT will end it. I've hinted that her father owns a few oil wells and even that didn't help. Please tell me what to do. I'm panicking.— ON A SPOT

Dear On: Canvass the male moose (or is it meese?) and lay off the handsome in-demand dreamboats. If you select some shy guys who don't have a flock of dames chasing them you'll do a whole lot better. They may even thank you!

Dear Ann: I'm male, unmarried, 30, and was once a believer in the Landers theory that if you do right, "Life is Lovely." Now I'm a convert to the hedonist philosophy "Dine, Dance and Do — for tomorrow you're Dead."

After college I worked in the most desolate part of the earth to promote world peace. To give you an idea of how square I was, I had an offer from a public relations firm for three times the salary — and turned it down.

Last year I returned to the States, met a beautiful girl, with an angel face, a figure, a mind, personality and I THOUGHT good character.

I took her out five times a week and treated her like a lady. We planned to be married.
