From Our Beautiful
Bring You These

... on August 12, 1898 ...

... through the louvered windows of the room, brilliant morning sunlight polishes palm fronds swaying at the touch of the trade winds. Across towering hills and deep, shadowed valleys back of the city drifts a vagrant rain cloud, dispersing as it goes. Outside the courtroom window, two mynah birds take a clumsy morning stroll, then raise their wings and disappear over the roof top. Above the building ripples an American flag.

Above that same building today ripples another American flag, but there is something different about both the building and the flag. The building now stands on ground that is part of an American State ... the flag now has fifty stars.

Hawaii, the 50th State has now become more than a happy, carefree playground. Its people reflect the progress and maturity of the rest of the American States ... the tolerance so necessary for our modern society. The vast sugar cane and pineapple industries of the islands serve most of the free world. The casual mode of living and dress has filtered to the mainland and effected our homes and dress to a great degree.

Today Hawaii's statehood is something new ... something to be talked about. Someday it will be a part of our American heritage. Much of the romance of the South Seas is dying but let us hope its beauties will always remain as something to dream about and then to see when we jet about this ever-shrinking world.

We hope our South Seas Food Festival this week will bring you not only wonderful values but exciting ideas in eating fun. Have a Luau soon while the weather is just right.
