Law in Action

Ambiguous Crimes

Many laws which concern small crimes such as vagrancy have come under fire as too vague. Under California law a "common drunk" was a vagrant. The other day the California Supreme Court declared that the term "common drunk" was too vague. Hence, unconstitutional. For the court has said that a vague law is a denial of a fair trial. No crime should be ambiguous. From language a citizen should be able to know what is unlawful. He shouldn't have to guess.

Under the Constitution all state laws should apply alike. This could not be if each judge or jury could differ about what a "common drunk" meant. In one case the state made it a crime to gather in a gang with an ex-convict. For the Supreme Court "gangs" was so vague that no one could say for sure whether or not he was breaking the law. In another case the court upset a law against "touting or practices inimical to the public interest." Again too vague. Yet vague words may take on technical or common law meanings because of their long use in our law. In this case they will stand up in court. Thus the California Supreme Court has held that the phrase "person of lewd or immoral character" was clear enough. This demand for clear laws also accounts for the fact that there are no common law or unwritten crimes in California. All crimes must be described in the laws which the legislation passes.

Fall Brings Added Peril To Motorists

When the sun goes down, driving dangers go up. And one of the most dangerous periods, dusk, now comes an hour earlier, California Highway Patrol Commissioner Bradford M. Crittenden pointed out this week. "With the change back to standard time, sunset comes when many people are driving home from work. Although careful drivers will switch their headlights on as darkness approaches, the dying rays of the sun often prevent the vehicle's head lamps from providing 100 per cent effectiveness.

Garden Checklist

1. Plant Calendula, Cyclamen and Pansies for winter color; Stock and Snapdragons for late winter and early spring.
2. The many striking Lily hybrids can be planted this month. Be sure to give them good drainage.
3. Shop nurseries for early blooming azaleas. You'll find a good handful of them this month.
4. If snails and slugs are a bother, scatter snail pellets around the garden for easy control.
5. Staking will guard Chrysanthemums against the possibility of being flattened by early rains. Hold off feeding mums as they start to bloom.

Horkey-Moore Integrating Plastics Division

Engineering, research, development, production and test branches of the Plastics Division of Horkey-Moore Assoc. are being integrated into independent division status as the four-year-old organization moves into a new phase of its development, President Edward J. Horkey announced today. Work on several large contracts recently awarded the firm will be facilitated by uniting all operations of the division to be headed by John N. Kerr, vice president and Plastics Division general manager. HORKEY pointed out that the new status for the Plastics Division will give it a single management responsibility for all phases of reinforced plastics fabrication of radomes, honeycomb floors, rocket motor cases, pressure vessels and launching tubes, while providing additional administrative efficiency. Current programs include the production of rocket tube assembly containers for the U.S. Army and 550 rocket tubes to be used by the U. S. Navy on a classified missile. IN ANOTHER move aimed at facilitating expansion of the Division, Horkey announced that construction of a 27,000 sq. ft. factory building had been started alongside existing facilities in Torrance. The Horkey-Moore Plastics Division, which started operations last year, has shown steady progress toward the firm's announced goal of $1 million sales in 1961, said Horkey.
