Several Thousand Shoppers Participate in Zody's Fete

Several thousand people participated in the opening day celebration at Zody's new self-service department store here Thursday. Many shoppers expressed their approval of Zody's self-service operation, according to Richard H. Wolfe, vice president and general manager of the Zody's chain. Crowds thronged around the various film stars and celebrities who took part in the grand opening ceremonies. Chill Wills and Joan O'Brien who are now appearing in the new spectacular film, "The Alamo," attracted a great deal of attention. George Putnam, well-known KTTV announcer who officiated at the ribbon-cutting ceremonies, received a tremendous response from the crowd.

"We feel certain this new store will be as popular here in the South Bay as our first store is in Garden Grove," he added. Located at Hawthorne and 182nd St. Zody's is the second of a proposed multiple-store chain for the southern California area. The 74,000 sq. ft. operation, located adjacent to the South Bay Shopping center, is easily accessible from the entire South Bay area. A COMPLETE line of merchandise found in a full department store is offered at Zody's with special emphasis on women's fashions and clothing for the family. Many customers commented on the extremely large selection of merchandise, according to Mr. Wolfe. A unique feature of the store is its self-service operation which provides supermarket-type shopping carts for the customers. Opening day festivities will continue through November 10 with several popular personalities from the entertainment world to appear during this time.

Students cast secret ballots in voting booths, just as their parents will do on Tuesday. There was an 84 per cent turnout. The balloting followed an assembly at which both platforms were presented and the backgrounds of both candidates presented. Susan Perry was moderator, with Connie Eggleston and Pat Meyer acting as party historians.
