Graphic Reproduction Training School Beginning Here Monday

George A. Stevenson, Torrance author, publisher, and lecturer, announced today the opening of a new school to train girls and women as reproduction typist-technicians. "These highly-skilled people prepare books and advertising for photo-offset printing, layout, and make up material for printing," states Stevenson. "Industry doesn't have the time to train these girls, we will do it for them," continued Stevenson. "A survey shows we couldn't meet the demand for this type of service if we graduated a 1000 girls a year. The biggest demand is in the defense industry where thousands of reproduction typists, layout and makeup girls, and people who have obtained skill and knowledge in publications, are needed to prepare and produce handbooks and technical manuals, proposals, and many other kinds of copy for the Government services." "We want our first students as potential instructors and supervisors. Then we'll go right into plants and instruct on-the-job for companies," added Stevenson. First evening classes commence Monday, Nov. 14 and registrations are being accepted this week at the school's classrooms at 2305 Torrance Blvd., between 7 and 10 p.m., and all day Saturday Nov. 12. Stevenson's Graphic Arts Handbook, a best seller in its class, is being widely by colleges and trade schools as a text book, and has been acclaimed by some sources as the greatest published contribution to the graphic arts in 30 years.
