YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"My Parents Argue and Fight . . ."

Dear Ann Landers: I'm a 9-year-old girl who needs help before I end up in the bughouse.

My parents argue and fight constantly. When I go to bed at night I hear them cursing, shouting and throwing things. It's been like this for as long as I can remember and it seems to be getting worse. They have been separated three times but they always go back together.

I hate to have friends over because I never know what sort of mood my folks will be in. They both drink a little and they will fight in front of anybody. I have talked to my mother about it but she says all families have little arguments and that I'm too sensitive.

I have a steady boy friend but I don't want to rush into marriage just to get out of this house. Please tell me what to do. —HEADACHE

Dear Headache: Your folks are not going to change, so your best bet is to invest in some wax ear-plugs.

Your suggestion that they drink "a little" leads me to suspect that they probably drink a lot. Suggest that they take each other to A.A. and discover the dignity and grace that comes with sobriety.

Dear Ann Landers: I am being married in six weeks. My father passed away less than a year ago so we are having a simple ceremony in the minister's study with only the immediate family present.

My fiancé's sister is very bossy and she likes to run everything. I've managed to get along with her by keeping a respectable distance between us. She insists that I wear a white gown and veil because according to her, any girl who doesn't is admitting she hasn't "earned" it. I think it would be foolish to spend money on a bridal outfit to wear for 30 minutes in front of nine people. My fiancé says it makes no difference to him. Shall I agree just to keep peace in the family? —MARGE

Dear Marge: NO. Your conclusion is logical and hers is not. Don't do something you feel is senseless just to pacify your future sister-in-law. She's supposed to be a
