doesn't have a barrel to put on.

A husband can't sue for alimony no matter how much in the wrong the wife may be. In this state (New Jersey) she gets half of everything even if she never earned a dime.

So, my advice to all men is this: Before you walk down that aisle, see a lawyer. — NEWARK NEWT

Dear Next: The traditional role of a husband in our society is to support his wife and family. I do not agree that a caught wife should have to pay alimony, nor do I think that she should be rewarded for infidelity by hauling in loot.

Your suggestion that a prospective groom should see a lawyer leaves me as cold as yesterday's mashed potatoes. If a man suspects that he needs legal protection against being taken by his ever-lovin' bride, he's better off single.

Dear Ann Landers: The big sport around here is water skiing. We own a summer home and enjoy it by having our friends and relatives come every weekend with THEIR friends and relatives, most of whom are strangers to us.

We love company, and we want them to come — BUT those people don't realize that it takes a lot of gas and oil to run a motor several hours a day. We can't take the expense. Yet we hesitate to say anything because we don't want to appear petty. How can we get the idea across without offending anyone? Please hurry the advice. I see 'em comin' now. — D.E.

Dear D.E.: You can't run with both the hares and the hounds. If you "can't stand the expense" say so. They shouldn't be offended. In fact, it may even make them feel more comfortable about coming to visit.
